Mankind's fate may rest with one youngster in 'The Passage'

Mark-Paul Gosselaar and Saniyya Sidney star in "The Passage," premiering Monday on Fox.

The "Passage" in the title of a new series could refer to a young character's rite of passage, but it actually means more than that.

Based on Justin Cronin's book trilogy of the same name, "The Passage" is one of the new year's first new television dramas as Fox premieres it Monday, Jan. 14. With filmmaker Ridley Scott ("Alien," "Blade Runner") among its executive producers, the show returns Mark-Paul Gosselaar ("NYPD Blue," "Saved by the Bell") to weekly work as a federal agent assigned to transport a young test subject (Saniyya Sidney, "Fences") for Project Noah, a secret operation involving a virus that either could save or destroy the human race.

The agent ultimately comes to feel more responsible for the youngster than even he expected, going on the run with her while mankind's fate hangs in the balance. Jamie McShane ("Bloodline," "Sons of Anarchy"), Emmanuelle Chriqui ("Entourage") and Henry Ian Cusick ("Lost," "The 100") also are among stars of the saga.

A co-producer of the series, author Cronin reports that film rights to his "Passage" novels were purchased more than a decade ago. "Adapting it for an entirely different medium that has a different toolbox, it has different things that it can do," he reasons, "and things that it can't do that I can do. For that reason, I'm completely agnostic on this. I'm really excited by what they're doing. I didn't write a novel where people would read the book for an hour and then not read it again for a week ... so the rhythms are completely different, the constraints are different and the requirements are different."

Also an executive producer of the show, Matt Reeves ("Cloverfield," "War for the Planet of the Apes") was attached to direct a movie version when he suggested that the Scott Free production company make it as a TV series instead. "Literally, they laughed at me and said, 'No, no, no, no, no, no, no,' " he recalls, "and that's because they had spent a lot of money to try and do (feature-film) drafts. And I was like, 'No, no. Really.' It was just that the story is so massive and so beautiful."

Gosselaar says of his "Passage" involvement, "What hooked me was the relationship with Amy (played by Sidney). I have a 12-year-old daughter, so I can relate. For me, that was the heart of the story." Young co-star Sidney notes she's been learning a lot from working with TV veteran Gosselaar: "When I act and I'm with him, it feels wonderful, just being able to play a girl that really needs someone, it's really that whatever Amy's going through, I'm going through. So I need Mark-Paul, always."

Checking in with DAVID MAZOUZ

The question kept coming up for David Mazouz throughout the run of "Gotham": When will Bruce Wayne finally transform into Batman?

And while we know the answer will be "soon" now that the hourlong drama is in the midst of its fifth and final season Thursdays on Fox, the 17-year-old actor reasons that has always been the case from the premiere episode in 2014. But until this season, he had been as in-the-dark as the show's fans.

"You always have to tease it a little bit," he explains, "so I usually would be like, 'Well you know, you're going to see Bruce transform into Batman this season.' Which is always true. Every episode, he does get closer to Batman. But Batman himself, I didn't know. But now going into Season 5, I don't know how much I'm allowed to say but I'm going to leave it there. ... I know something now."

As he looks back on five seasons as Wayne, Mazouz is sad to leave what he considers to be a rich character behind, no matter how painful playing him could be. For the young actor, this has been a learning experience like no other.

"On this show even, there's been so much that Bruce has gone through," Mazouz says, " ... and he's always surprising us with either his strength or his pain or the strength that comes out of his pain. He's had so many arcs where they've been really fun to do, but they've been really hard to do because they're really unique."

Full name: David (pronounced 'Dah-veed') Albert Mazouz

Birth date: Feb. 19, 2001

Birthplace: Los Angeles

Family ties: Is the son of a physician, Michel, and a psychotherapist, Rachel; one older sister, Rebecca

TV credits: "Mike & Molly," "Private Practice," "The Office," "Criminal Minds," "Touch," "Major Crimes," "Drop Dead Diva," "Family Guy" (voice), "Gotham"

Movie credits: "Amish Grace" (TV, 2010), "Coming & Going" (2011), "Dear Dumb Diary" (TV, 2013), "Sanitarium" (2013), "The Games Maker" (2014), "The Darkness" (2016), "Incarnate" (2016)

Did you know: Plays guitar; received a guitar from "Touch" co-star Kiefer Sutherland for his 11th birthday

Click on YouTube for food and nutrition information

With a good many of us trying to eat healthy these days, we'd all like to know more about what goes into our foods – and hence our bodies.

So foods heavy on fats, sugars, carbs, sodium, corn syrup, gluten, partially hydrogenated oils and GMOs raise red flags for the label-reading set, and for good reason.

Food, to put it succinctly, is fuel and if we put garbage in, then what comes out won't be great. And we'll be overweight, sick and tired as a result, as the recent epidemic of obesity and diabetes proves.

But there are reliable sources for good food info out there, particularly on YouTube, which offers up a library's worth of documentaries and programs to educate you on what you consume. Because life is too short to eat crap.

"Nutrition 101 With Dr. Mike": In this 30-minute video, Dr. Michael VanDerschelden explains the basics of a proper diet, starting by debunking the myth of the "Food Guide Pyramid" introduced by the USDA in 1992 and replacing it with a diet rich in fruits, vegetables and lean proteins. Lots of good common-sense advice here.

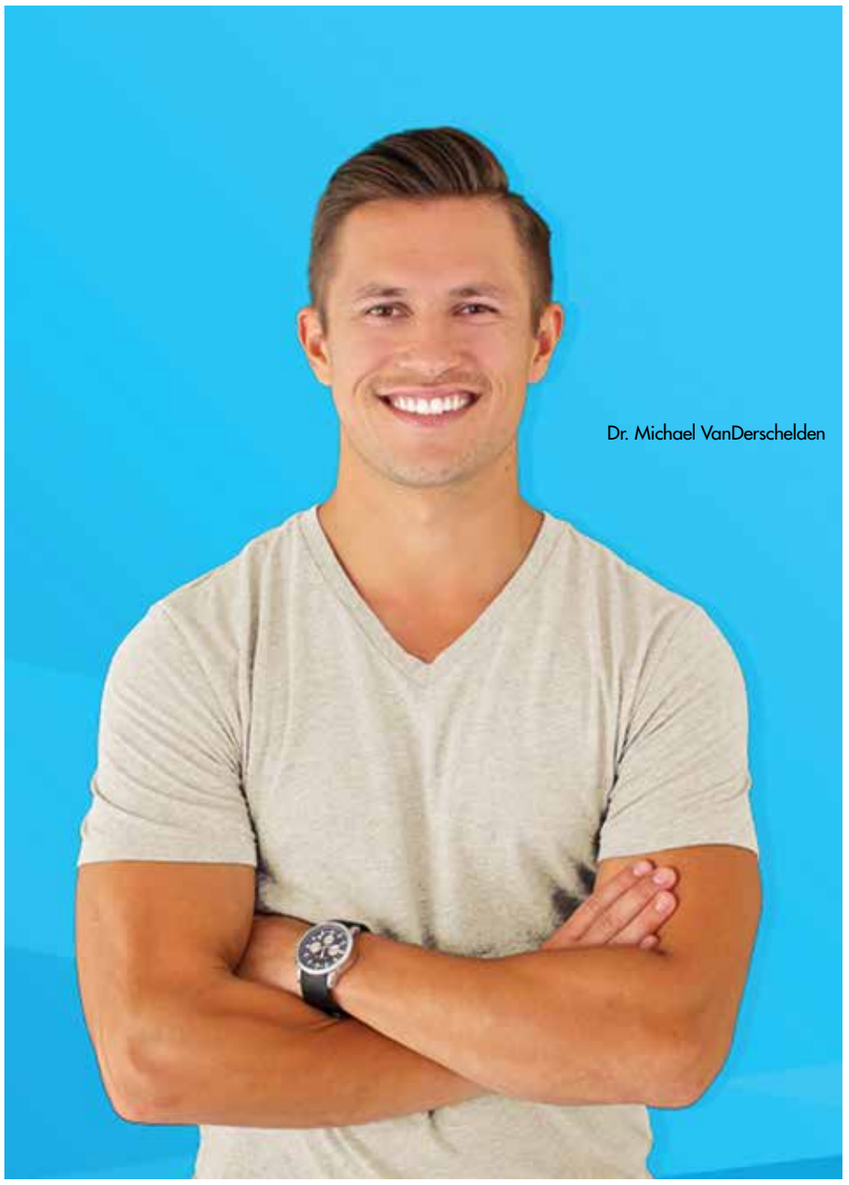

"The Surprisingly Dramatic Role of Nutrition in Mental Health": Yes, what you eat affects not only your body but your mind, and in this TED talk, clinical psychologist Dr. Julia Rucklidge goes through a range of scientific research, including her own, showing the critical role diet plays in mental health.

"Processed Food Documentary: Processed Food vs. Nutritional Needs": Beware of processed foods, is the message of this half-hour film, in which Dr. Maya Adam outlines how our increased reliance on convenience foods combined with decreased physical activity has led to the rise in childhood obesity and obesity in general.

"Organic Food: Hope or Hype?": From German broadcaster Deutsche Welle comes this 2018 documentary that questions organic foods, whether they really do carry health benefits, if there really are fewer pesticides in them and whether there is any way for consumers to determine if they are indeed organic.

"Food on the Brain": It's no secret that junk food is bad for our bodies but in this documentary from the BBC, host Stephen Nolan travels the U.S. to learn about the inner workings of our brains and how a junk food diet can affect it.

"Super Size Me": Morgan Spurlock's 2004 documentary, in which he lived on a McDonald's-only diet for a month, still stands as a cautionary tale of the perils of fast food.

Clint Eastwood carries 'The Mule'

Clint Eastwood is the Hollywood equivalent of the engine that could: Quite admirably, he just keeps going and going. And at an age where it might be challenging enough just to direct a movie, he also still puts himself front-and-center as its star.

"The Mule" is the latest of those exercises, and it gives Eastwood a great character: a senior citizen whose personal life is on the ropes, to put it mildly, but he finds surprising redemption and financial success for himself in becoming a drug transporter – or a "mule" – for a Mexican cartel.

Where this becomes much more than a standard crime drama is in the role and how Eastwood plays it. Regrets? This man has had a few ... actually, many more than a few, especially where his long-neglected ex-wife and daughter are concerned. The daughter is played by Eastwood's own offspring Alison, giving their scenes together an authenticity you can't buy.

Past Eastwood colleagues Laurence Fishburne and Bradley Cooper resurface as DEA agents who eventually get clued into the old-timer's activities, and Dianne Wiest has some heartbreaking moments as the ex-wife. However, there's no doubt that "The Mule" belongs to Eastwood, and what's especially impressive and gratifying is that he knowingly uses it to let his image show some wear and tear.

Those with degrees in psychiatry might speculate how much the Hollywood veteran wants his latest alter ego to mirror the effects of the lengthy career run he's had himself. For viewers, this might just be the most vulnerable Eastwood has allowed himself to be seen since "The Bridges of Madison County" – and that's almost a 25-year gap.

Dianne Wiest and Clint Eastwood

Even in recent films that he's only directed, such as "The 15:17 to Paris," brawn and bravado have been the qualities mostly in the spotlight. With "The Mule," Eastwood gets a lot more personal on a very basic, human level ... and it's somewhat endearing to see that from the man who has given pop culture such legendarily steely images as those of The Man With No Name and "Dirty" Harry Callahan.

With "The Mule," Eastwood generates a story and a character that keep you compelled and intrigued to find out how things will end up. That means everything in what principally is a two-hour portrait of a single figure, confirming that its driving force isn't done making the day of moviegoers just yet.
