Mark Harmon stars in "NCIS" Tuesday on CBS.

Pam Dawber is now Mark Harmon's leading lady on and off 'NCIS'

It's taken a very long time, but Pam Dawber finally is working with her husband.

He happens to be the star and an executive producer of one of the world's most popular television series: Mark Harmon, who welcomes his "Mork & Mindy"-alum spouse to her third of four scheduled guest appearances on CBS' "NCIS" Tuesday, May 18. She continues to play Marcie Warren, an investigative reporter whose professional determination both intrigues and frustrates current Naval Criminal Investigative Service exile Leroy Jethro Gibbs (Harmon). In the newest episode, they're led by Marcie's friend's murder to a serial killer.

"I blew my own mind," the ever-friendly Dawber laughs about deciding to take the "NCIS" part. "I certainly was not shopping to go back on television, and Mark didn't even tell me this was going to come my way until I suddenly got a call from my agent. I'm usually like, 'Harry, leave me alone! I don't want to do this anymore!' Then, Mark told me they'd created this character, and they were naming all these actresses they could go to. And he said, 'What you're looking for is my wife.' "

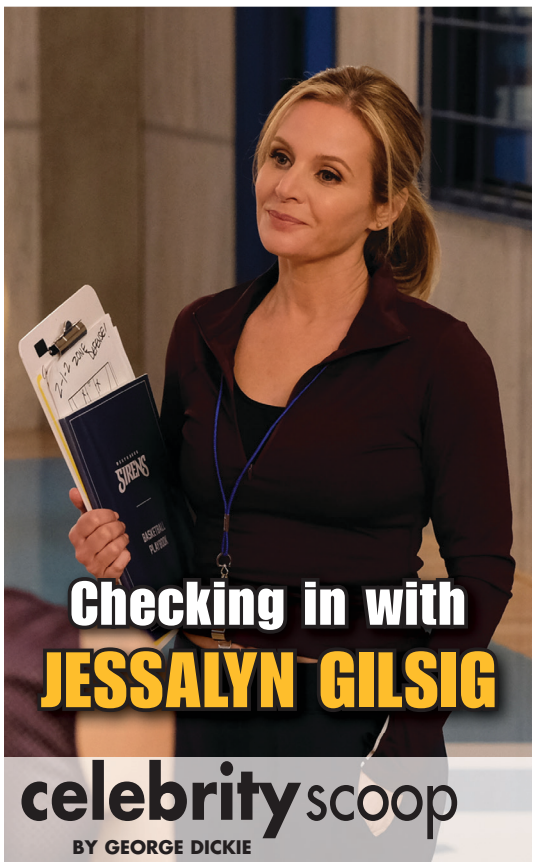

Dawber notes that she had turned down previous "NCIS" offers "for just various reasons," but this one was clinched by a call from "NCIS" co-star Rocky Carroll, who would direct the first of her episodes. "He said, 'You know everybody here. We love you. It'll be safe. It'll be fun.' I ended up going upstairs and putting on my meditation tape, and I breathed and I cried. And I decided to do it."

Even then, Dawber admits, she had her doubts about proceeding. "I thought, 'What if I can't remember my lines? What if I look like everybody's grandma?' And then, this was my twisted internal dialogue: 'What will make you feel worse, chickening out, or going forward and being scared but agreeing to do it?' Chickening out really would have made me unhappy with myself, so I did it, and we just had a blast."

Though they've been married for 34 years and have two sons, Dawber allows that she was "a little nervous" about working with Harmon. "I love to hear about his day, not be in his day, and he likes to come home and separate himself from the studio. He's so supportive of me, and he was just wonderful. We had a really good time doing this."

Dawber also appears in the May 25 "NCIS" season finale, and while the show has been renewed for its 19th year, there's no guarantee she'll return for that – and she maintains she's perfectly fine either way that goes. "You know," she concludes, "I'm just not going down that road at all."

For Jessalyn Gilsig, going back to work for David E. Kelley on "Big Shot" was an enjoyable return to familiar ground.

In addition to her memorable role as strong-willed teacher Lauren Davis in the prolific producer's acclaimed Fox 2000-04 drama "Boston Public," she was also a regular on his short-lived 1999 ABC comedy "Snoops," had a critically acclaimed 1999 arc in ABC's "The Practice" and a guest-starring turn in the short-lived 2011-12 NBC comedy "Harry's Law."

So when the opportunity came up to play Holly Barrett, an assistant basketball coach at a private girls school opposite John Stamos' head coach Marvyn Korn in the currently streaming Disney+ dramedy, she was more than amenable to collaborate again with her former boss.

"David gave me my first big break and ironically it was in a school," the 49-year-old Canadian actress explains, referring to "Boston Public." And so when I read the script, I remember having a feeling of, 'I belong here. I need to walk these hallways. This is my world.' So it was pretty nostalgic, to be honest, to be invited to step back into a David Kelley show and then as an educator."

The role also struck a chord for Gilsig as a mother. She has a 14-year-old daughter who plays soccer and herself was a student athlete in her teens.

"I'm a very enthusiastic soccer parent," Gilsig says. "So actually in a way, it was just sort of fun to take something that I've always been passionate about and then marry it with my work.

"I'm also a huge believer in the power and the importance of team sports for younger people," she continues, "and how that can really help you develop so many skills for life. There are so many studies that show that being on a team has all kinds of benefits when it comes down to your career and success. So I'm excited to be able to highlight this."

Bertinelli ready for a picnic on 'Valerie's Home Cooking'

In the age of the pandemic, getting outdoors is a welcome escape from day-to-day isolation. And these days, it also seems kind of exotic.

Valerie Bertinelli is feeling it, too, which is why in the new season of her Food Network series "Valerie's Home Cooking," she's ready to have a picnic. So in the episode airing Sunday, May 16, the cookbook author and former "Hot in Cleveland" and "One Day at a Time" actress prepares a portable meal for husband-and-wife Southern California first responders.

"That comes from one of my best girlfriends, Jo Stougaard, who happens to be a travel and food writer," Bertinelli explains. "And her nephew Chase happens to be a firefighter and his wife is a nurse. So I thought, 'Well, I want to pay it forward to them. And I know Jo, she can bring them the food.' And it was a lot of fun to put together some really great travel food, if anybody wants to have their own picnic, especially since we can go outside now without masks. You can go to a park and have a picnic."

As for what always goes into her picnic basket, Bertinelli starts with the obvious.

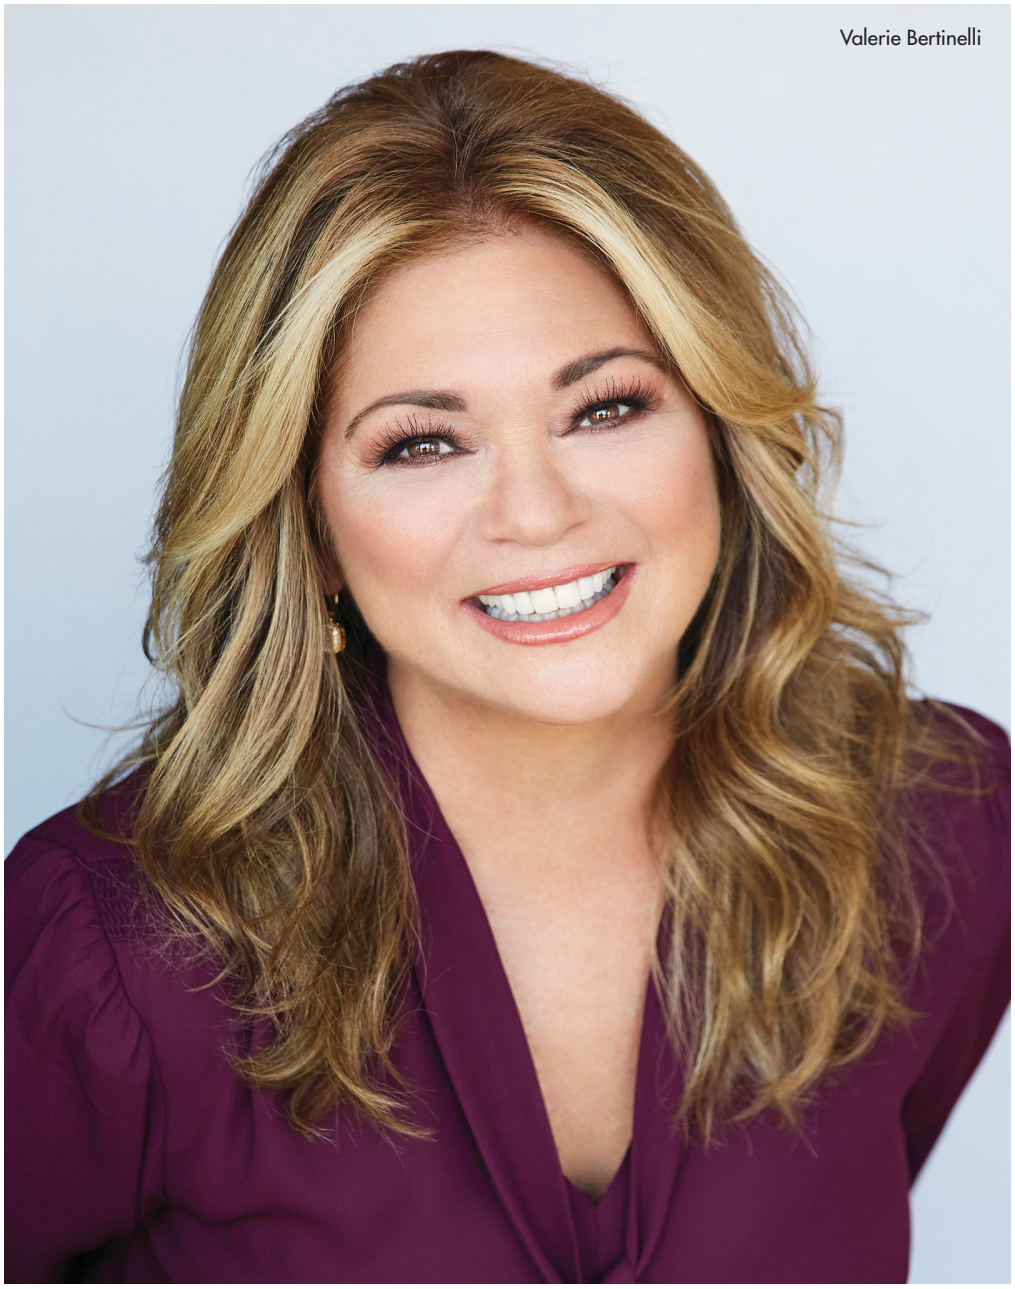

"Sandwiches, of course," she says. "Easy sandwiches, easy cold salads – any kind of salad that travels easy like a slaw, because cabbages hold up or kale will hold up better. And just great sandwiches, There's so many different things you can do. Sandwiches are like pizza. Like anything you put between bread is going to taste great. Anything you put on top of bread and bake it like a pizza is going to taste great. You know, only your imagination can hold you back."

In another episode this season, Bertinelli does a remote segment for NBC's "Today" and heads to the New York apartment of that show's co-host Hoda Kotb to demonstrate a steak recipe. And then burgers are the focus of another installment, in which she challenges herself to come up with new variations on an American classic.

Away from "Home Cooking," Bertinelli has a pilot for a prospective series airing Saturday, May 22, titled "Valerie's Hot Dish," in which she invites actress friends Melissa Peterman and Nicole Sullivan over to her house for food, drink and conversation, with guest appearances by TV personality Ross Mathews and her Food Network cohort Duff Goldman.

"Maybe you call it like a cross between a talk show and a cooking show," Bertinelli says. "It's a little bit of everything. I'd be curious to see what people kind of call it when they tune in to watch.

"Maybe we'll get more of an idea," she adds with a laugh.

Can Nolan Arenado conquer the unfriendly confines of Busch Stadium?

Those who thought Nolan Arenado's otherworldly offensive numbers would come down to Earth once he left Coors Field will certainly take interest in how he fares this season.

Indeed, the former Colorado Rockies third baseman and three-time National League home run champ now faces the spacious dimensions of Busch Stadium in his first season as a St. Louis Cardinal after eight in the thin air of Denver's Coors Field, where he regularly rang up MVP-like numbers.

His stats through his first month with his new team are less than impressive. Through 21 games, the five-time All-Star was hitting .253 with four homers, a .303 on-base percentage and an .749 OPS. And his numbers at Busch, the decidedly hitter-unfriendly park where he will be playing half his games this season, are also underwhelming: .235 average, two homers, .297 OBP and a .768 OPS in nine contests.

Arenado's career stats, however, tell a tale of two different players. Over eight seasons at Coors, he hit .322 with 136 homers, a .376 OBP and an OPS of .985. Everywhere else: .263 with 99 dingers, .322 and .793. But within that are 24 career games at Busch prior to 2021, in which he had five homers, an OBP of .337 and an OPS of .848, numbers more in line with his Coors stats.

So is he the product of Coors Field or is he a devastating hitter no matter where he plays? Certainly, a full 162-game season at Busch will help answer the question.

Arenado and the Cardinals can be seen in action Sunday, May 16, when they conclude a three-game road series against the San Diego Padres in a game airing on ESPN.

Jason Beghe

OF 'CHICAGO P.D.' ON NBC

BY JAY BOBBIN

Eight seasons in, your portrayal of Detective Sergeant Hank Voight is so established on "Chicago P.D.," do you embrace any changes the producers and writers try to make to him?

My favorite quote is from Pablo Picasso, and he said, "I paint the picture to find out what it looks like." I aspire to work like that and live like that – it takes a lot of courage, and I don't always succeed – but Hank is better at that than I am.

I think a lot of his power is that he's able to simply exist in the present time. He doesn't worry about tomorrow or yesterday. He's very "here," and I think that's part of why people find him intimidating, because he's so present. He is just ready for anything, more than most people are willing to experience.

Is it tough to "play tough" constantly, as you do with Voight?

It's interesting that he has this savage quality. He's kind of primal, so you can get an idea of what's going to happen. I think what's been interesting about this season is that for the first time, he's been forced to reflect and look at himself, rather than just being himself and looking outward.

How do you think it's been for Voight lately to mediate conflicts among his detectives, while also being a boots-on-the-ground team member alongside them?

It's hard. He's doing the best he can, and sometimes he does better than at other times – but they're a unit. It's eight hearts with one beat in a way, and they depend on each other. There are times when Halstead leads or Upton leads or Voight leads, and that's how we work as actors as well as how the characters work.

BY JAY BOBBIN

Mark Wahlberg starts an 'Instant Family'

It's always nice to get what's known as a "feel-good movie," and "Instant Family" – which FX shows Monday, May 17 – certainly is that. Its plot may have you thinking you'll know exactly what's coming – and you will, but it's still very agreeable.

Mark Wahlberg and Rose Byrne play a house-flipping couple who fear they've waited too long to become parents, so they try to catch up fast by adopting not one child but three ... siblings (portrayed by Isabela Moner, Gustavo Quiroz and Julianna Gamiz) who are old enough to be set in their ways, giving their new mom and dad big challenges in trying to put their own stamp on raising the kids.

"Instant Family" was directed and co-written by Sean Anders, who also worked with Wahlberg on the "Daddy's Home" comedies. (Both are among the producers here as well.) Anders is an adoptive parent himself, and the movie does indeed feel like it comes from someone who knows what he's talking about, certainly in the scenes that feature Octavia Spencer and Tig Notaro as adoption-agency operators.

There's also a sense of authenticity in the moments at home, as the adults and the youngsters alike try to figure out their place with each other. They're savvy in their own ways, but when they're in juxtaposition, they're fish out of water. Where "Instant Family" is smart is in not depicting the Wahlberg and Byrne characters as sitcom-like bumblers; yes, they err, but they're still real and relatable.

Rose Byrne and Mark Wahlberg

That works particularly well for Wahlberg, who's intentionally been all over the map with his screen work, playing serious parts as well as virtual caricatures. Here, he hits somewhere in the middle of that range, leaning toward the more grounded end. Byrne has had a similar performance path over the course of her roles, and she proves a good match for him.

It's also hard to complain about a picture that makes solid use of the gifts of Margo Martindale ("The Americans") and Julie Hagerty ("Airplane!"), both cast as in-laws. Michael O'Keefe and Joan Cusack are among other familiar and welcome faces in the supporting cast.

The film does take some predictable turns – for instance, the kids' biological mother isn't completely out of the picture – but it's so generally enjoyable in its approach and its performances, "Instant Family" is like a newly met relative you hit it off with right away. And that's a good thing.

"Meerkat Manor" (BBC America — series premiere, June 5)

Three families of meerkats, all of them descended from a formidable matriarch known as Flower, may share the latter's bloodline and neighboring South African turf. As this enduring — and often endearing — animal clan returns to TV for another season, however, these relatives are also rivals who are forced to compete for food, water and other resources in the rapidly shifting landscape of the Kalahari Desert. Bill Nighy narrates.

OF 'GIRLS5EVA' ON PEACOCK

What do you think of the reunited-girl-group premise of "Girls5eva"?

I've been in a lot of some form of a girl group, whether it's sisters or on "Ally McBeal" ... somehow or another, I've always been in some trio or so of girls. And the beauty about doing it as a character (in "Girls5eva") playing Wickie is, you have an excuse to hold the notes a little bit longer than you're supposed to. No one really thinks you're a jerk when you try to steal the show. It's pretty nice.

You've certainly done it before – in your Tony Award-winning stage performance in "Hamilton" – so are you comfortable with singing, dancing and acting all at once on "Girls5eva"?

It's a triple-threat situation. I mean, to sing in front of Sara Bareilles; to do comedy in front of Tina Fey, just to be in the room with Paula Pell and Busy Philipps ... there's a graciousness that everybody has, and it's such an invitation to play and to create something which felt like such a gift in the time that we did the show.

It felt surreal and fantastical. We should have been more intimidated. We were, but it lasted for about two seconds, because everybody that's there, their genius really is there to serve you. It was really a blessing.

Do you have a favorite girl group?

I love every girl group ever, but I tend to be the biggest fan of ones that were not clearly pushing one girl, (where) it wasn't clearly an audition for one girl to break forward – when they truly needed and depended on each other, like they couldn't have done it by themselves. I love TLC. It's like the three of them together were the perfect artist. They're my favorite

'American Experience' recalls the passion and power of Billy Graham

Before it was used regularly in religious circles, the media helped Billy Graham reach the masses.

A recap of how that happened is offered as PBS' "American Experience" recalls the charismatic evangelist in a new episode Monday, May 17 (check local listings). Acquaintances and historians comment on the impact Graham had, not only in preaching to his loyal followers – often in arenas that made stunning settings for his televised "Crusades" – but also in counseling world figures who included U.S. presidents and other global heads of state.

One person in the PBS program who has a very personal view of Graham is fellow pastor John Huffman, who cites Graham as a major influence on his own pursuits in both academia and religion (detailed in Huffman's 2012 memoir, "A Most Amazing Call"). "He was a half-generation ahead of me," Huffman reflects in an interview for this article. "I first met him when I was just a little kid of 6 years old, and he would have been in his mid-20s then."

However, the age difference seemed less a factor as the two men's connection progressed. "We were friends right up to the time of his death," Huffman says. "Both of us had a lot of interest in politics and journalism and, of course, our common theological commitments. I had also worked with (minister and author) Norman Vincent Peale, and they both were very profound students of culture. And both were very intuitive."

Billy Graham

Though he allows that he "had my own goals as I went into the ministry," Huffman says he found Graham, despite the latter's "international status and fame, extremely down-to-earth and personable. He had an almost overwhelming fear of pride taking over in his life. I think he really believed that God's hand was on him, but that if he ever took the credit for it, it would disappear."

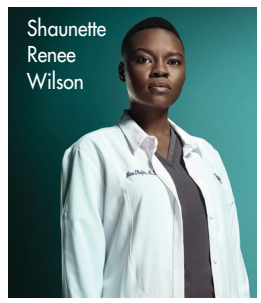

At the same time, Graham's enormous reach became legendary ... but "he also knew the dangers of that," Huffman maintains, "and how it had shipwrecked many up-and-coming leaders. Their prominence had gone to their heads, and they made mistakes."

Why one actress no longer resides on 'The Resident'

Q: Why was the character Mina written out of "The Resident"? – Richard Morris, Wheeling, W. Va.

Shaunette Renee Wilson

A: For reasons she hadn't specified as of press time, actress Shaunette Renee Wilson asked to leave the Fox medical drama when work on the fourth season began. The writers and producers had time to structure the story that saw her character, Dr. Mina Okafor, depart to return home to Nigeria because her visa was expiring.

Mina's exit wasn't completely clean, since she had to leave behind her boyfriend ... Dr. AJ Austin (Malcolm-Jamal Warner), who stayed with his mother as she was being treated for lung cancer. Expect Mina to continue to be referenced, then, and don't be surprised if Wilson reprises the part at some point since she apparently left on good terms.

Kristen Welker

Q: It was nice to see Kristen Welker reveal her baby news on "Today." It seems like she's risen through the ranks fast there. Where did she start? – Sarah Porter, via e-mail

A: As she and he husband await the expected June arrival of their child via a surrogate, Welker continues her dual NBC News roles as a chief White House correspondent and the co-anchor (with Peter Alexander) of the Saturday "Weekend Today." Welker actually had been an intern at "Today" while attending Harvard College, where she was a history major.

BEST TONY RANDALL PROJECTS

"Mister Peepers" (1952-55) Career traction really began for Randall with his sitcom role as a teaching colleague of Wally Cox's title character.

"Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" (1957) Randall's movie cred took a big leap with this comedy – which leads off a Turner Classic Movies double feature of his films Saturday, May 22 – in the title role of a talent-agency lackey enlisted to pretend to be the beau of an "oh-so-kissable" starlet (Jayne Mansfield).

"Pillow Talk" (1959) Randall had great success in playing the third wheel to Doris Day and Rock Hudson in several romantic comedies, the first of which was this hit (with an Oscar-winning script and a memorable title song by Day) about very dissimilar people sharing a telephone line.

"The Brass Bottle" (1964) Sort of a variation on "Aladdin," this comedy – the other half of TCM's Randall double feature on May 22 – casts the actor as an architect who unwittingly unleashes a genie (Burl Ives) and a whole wave of complications.

"7 Faces of Dr. Lao" (1964) One of Randall's best-remembered projects, this fantasy film from producer George Pal casts the star in multiple roles, some of them enhanced by elaborate makeup and special effects ... but the central one being the proprietor of a traveling circus who tries to help residents save their town.

"The Alphabet Murders" (1965) Randall gave the role of Agatha Christie's master sleuth Hercule Poirot a whirl in this mystery ... and while it's not the best screen representation of the character, it's respectable on its own merits.

"The Odd Couple" (1970-75) With Art Carney and Jack Lemmon having put their stamps on the part earlier, it's no small feat that Randall made the role of fussy roommate Felix Unger his own opposite Jack Klugman (who was tasked himself in succeeding Walter Matthau as slovenly Oscar Madison) in this classic television-series spinoff of Neil Simon's popular play.

"The Tony Randall Show" (1976-78) Randall traded on his success from "The Odd Couple" by going into another series soon afterward, this one casting him as a Philadelphia judge. It came from a murderers' row of TV-producing talents including Gary David Goldberg, Hugh Wilson, Tom Patchett and Jay Tarses.

"Love, Sidney" (1981-83) While it has been debated whether Randall was playing the first gay lead character in a television series, he earned critical acclaim for the show, which he made his swan song to weekly TV work.

"The King of Comedy" (1982) Randall gave Martin Scorsese's dark comedy about the talk-show world a dose of authenticity by appearing as himself.

"Down With Love" (2003) The real fun of Randall appearing in this light satire (one of his last jobs) was that the picture was patterned on the frothy romantic comedies he had made years earlier with Doris Day and Rock Hudson.
