Food, fun and a run — for a cause

Hundreds turn out for races, food and music to benefit Bristol Warren Education Foundation

Bristol's Pete Harley crossed the finish line more than a minute ahead of his nearest competitor to win the Food Truck 5k on Saturday. Mr. Harley completed the course, that circles the Warren Reservoir, in 17:58. Emily McCaffrey of Warwick won the women's division with a time of 19:50.

The race was just part of the fun at the afternoon-long event hosted by the Bristol Warren Education Foundation (BWEF). The day started with Warren's Tony DaPonte orchestrating 40-50 kids who were participating in 'fun races' on the Kickemuit Middle School Track. The 5k and a 1-mile walk went off just after that, all followed by a food truck festival at the Pete Sepe Pavilion.

"It's hard to tell who's having the most fun," said BWEF board member Darcy DaCosta. "We really wanted to put on a family-style event that had something for everyone."

Judging from the smiles spread around the Warren Recreation Facility Saturday there was, something for everyone. The post-race party featured live music, dancing, yoga, bubbles (for little ones), beer (for the older ones) and of course the food trucks.

Though this was the inaugural Food Truck 5k, BWEF is carrying on the legacy of a 25-year tradition. They have taken over management of this race from the Bristol Warren Substance Abuse Task Force, who had put on the event for the past couple of decades. "It was important to BWEF and others in town to keep this event going," Ms. DaCosta said. "We are happy to take what others have worked hard to build into a community tradition and put our own spin on it."

"We are thrilled by the response and turnout, it's all been really positive" said Ms. DaCosta, "we will definitely be back next year, bigger and better."

Financial meeting set; tax hike up for vote

Big question mark lingers as Warren contests school funding formula

BY TED HAYES

thayes@eastbaynewspapers.com

With Warren's annual Financial Town Meeting set for this coming Monday, May 19, the fate of Warren's summer recreation program — and a tax hike expected to be nearly 8 percent — hinges on a decision due out any day from Rhode Island Superior Court.

Justice Luis Matos is expected to rule by the end of this week whether a crucial state education funding formula has been applied appropriately in Bristol Warren over the past three years. Town officials contend that it has not been applied correctly, and as a result has cost the town millions each year. This year alone, Warren Town Manager Thomas Gordon said, the difference could amount to as much as $2 million, should the judge decide in Warren's favor. A ruling in Warren's favor, he said, would reduce Warren's obligation to the school district from the $13.18 million required by the Joint Finance Committee to $11.127 million, as computed in Warren's take on the formula.

Over the past month, council members have slashed the budget to help keep expenses in line, cutting part time positions, the summer recreation program at Burr's Hill and many DPW programs and hours. Still, the cuts have not been enough to stave off a tax increase. Currently, the oper-

Police hunt person who shot dog

Gemma, a 16-month-old German shepherd mix, is home now, safe and recovering. The hunt for whoever shot her, though, continues.

Warren police are looking for information on who shot the gray-coated, brown-eyed family pet earlier this month. They won't say what kind of weapon was used, but said the dog's owner, a Barton Avenue resident, called police at 9:26 p.m. on Tuesday, May 6, to report that Gemma had been shot at approximately 2 p.m. somewhere in the neighborhood of 20 Barton Ave. According to Warren police Lt. Roland Brule, Gemma is safely at home and is recovering.

Warren man charged with running over cop

A 27-year-old Warren man was arrested early Saturday morning, May 10, by officers from the Warwick and Cranston police departments, after allegedly running over a Cranston police officer after being kicked out of a nightclub. Around midnight, officers attempted to stop Ralph Delullo, 27, of 20 Hanley Farm Road, Warren, as he was leaving the Mardi Gras Multi Club in Cranston. Both officers were working a special security detail at the club and had just assisted staff with evicting Mr. Delullo from the club.

Officers approached Mr. Delullo after seeing him get into his car. But as they walked toward him he started the car and took off, allegedly striking Officer Salvador Sanchez and sending him over the hood. Mr. Delullo was later located by officers from the Warwick Police Department near the airport connector in Warwick. He was charged with felony assault with a dangerous weapon. Officer Sanchez was not injured.

won't be held until September, at least. Richard Perry, 56, a former Little League umpire and coach, worked as a custodian at the Kickemuit Middle School. He and his brother Jesse have been charged with nearly a dozen counts of child molestation, in allegations that span several decades and were originally brought by Bristol police. Richard Perry was indicted by a grand jury last year on three counts of second degree child molestation. He has pleaded not guilty to all charges. His trial was originally scheduled to be held this summer, but has been pushed back due to allow his attorney to deal with a medical issue.

Reed visits as Hope & Main inches closer to opening date

Sen. Reed, USDA officials tour site as construction continues; overwhelming interest in incubator

BY TED HAYES

thayes@eastbaynewspapers.com

There was no shortage of good food spread out when Sen. Jack Reed and many others met at the Hope & Main kitchen incubator on Main Street Friday morning for a tour of the landmark venture, which is still under construction.

Senator Reed joined with local food entrepreneurs, officials from the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), and Hope & Main founder Lisa Raiola for a firsthand look at efforts to transform the 100-year-old former school into the state's first full-service food business incubator.

Construction is going quickly, Ms. Raiola said, and the building should be ready for its first group of "incubees" by late July. Though the first class will be about 40 incubees, Ms. Raiola said many, many more have expressed interest and a series of weekly off-site workshops on matters important to potential incubees have been packed.

"This is getting big fast," Ms. Raiola said. "What we're looking for are people that have solid ideas and can articulate a plan, a vision, a brand for their product."

Friday's tour was not just a chance to look at Hope & Main's progress, but also to tout the availability of $30 million in competitive grants for the United States Department of Agriculture's newly-expanded Farmers Market and Local Food Promotion Program (FMLFPP).

"Rhode Island has so many talented chefs, bakers, farmers, fishermen, and more than 50 farmers' markets," Sen. Reed said. "Rhode Island is already a great culinary destination. I want to help the state continue building its capacity as a food hub and connect more farmers and food entrepreneurs to the resources they need to grow their businesses."

USDA, which also extended Hope & Main a $2.9 million loan to get off the ground, will make the competitive grants available through the Agricultural Marketing Services (AMS) Farmers Market and Local Food Promotion Program. The funds are designed to help producers better market and promote healthy food access by connecting consumers with local farmers markets.

It's an idea near and dear to Ms. Raiola's heart, as she sees Hope & Main not just as a place where 'incubees' can shape their ideas into viable businesses, but also as a hub for locally-grown food and food producers.

Hope & Main's 17,500-square foot multi-kitchen facility will provide commercial cooking and storage space for food entrepreneurs and small businesses that can't afford the up-front costs of building their own commercial kitchens. When completed, the renovation will feature three shared-use commercial kitchens, including a gluten-free kitchen and bakery, over 6,000-square-feet of production space, cold and dry storage, a demonstration kitchen and classroom, and a 2,000-square-foot event space. The site will be used for farmers' markets, community events and other collective functions. Hope & Main will also partner with New Urban Farmers, which farms several plots of town-owned land, on a new on-site community garden.

"I commend Lisa Raiola for founding Hope & Main and working so hard to get it off the ground," Sen. Reed said. "This new facility will help local entrepreneurs collaborate, grow their operations, and get technical assistance to cook up exciting new business ventures and turn their ideas and recipes into commercial success. Hope & Main is already providing valuable education and business support to Rhode Island food entrepreneurs, and I am excited to see what they'll cook up next."

Mt. Hope students get head-on look at reality

BY ERIC DICKERVITZ

edickervitz@eastbaynewspapers.com

Students in the junior and senior classes at Mt. Hope High School were given a very realistic look at two facets of what occurs among their peers every day.

At the beginning of the school day on Friday, May 9, the students assembled in the high school auditorium where they watched a 10 minute video of their classmates socializing, drinking alcohol, smoking marijuana and abusing the substances in the name of a good time. But they also witnessed the tragedy of such activities – a head-on collision, injuries and death – the result of driving impaired that, statistically, occurs every 15 minutes.

When the film was over, the students assembled outside in the school parking lot where sirens blared in the distant as police, fire and rescue personnel arrived to a staged head-on collision. Inside the two crashed vehicles, students' make-up bloodied bodies sat, awaiting help from the arriving rescue crews.

In preparation for the exercise, Mt. Hope High School principal, Donald Rebello, told the students what to expect when they went outside.

"This is a most somber occasion for us," he told the assembled student body. "We have had, in our community, tragedies that could have been prevented. These tragedies have wreaked havoc in our community. This is not to scare you, but to compel you to stand up and be man and woman enough to prevent such a tragedy."

The mock crash presentation was an effort among the Bristol Fire and Rescue Department, the Bristol Police Department and the Students Taking Action Against Negative Decisions (STAAND) group. Two members of STAAND, Justin Ursini and Jacob Lebreux, wrote, produced and filmed the video, with the cooperation of the Bristol Police Department. In addition, the pair were assisted by students from the school's broadcasting organization, Huskies News Network (HNN), under the supervision of Brain Latessa and former broadcasting student, Michael Thrope.

In the video, police officers recreated the process that occurs every 15 minutes in police stations across the country as an impaired driver is arrested, brought into the station, afforded a phone call to a family member and held in a stark room where the events of the tragedy replay in his mind.

In the parking lot, the students watched as rescue crews dismantled the two vehicles just as they would at an actual accident scene, removing the victims from the wrecks. One student was pulled from a car and placed on a stretcher. Her body, fully covered in a blood stained sheet, was placed in front of the students as a reminder of the impact that one negative decision can have.

"The goal is to recognize the effect it has on the kids and families," said Courtney Lancaster, a member of the Bristol Rescue Department.

Ms. Lancaster worked closely with the students in STAAND, beginning in November, in order to deliver a message that they could relate to.

"For the last two years we used drinking and driving as the focus. This year we decided to use getting high and driving," she said.

Justin Ursini was satisfied the way the film debuted. He and Jacob will re-edit the film to include footage from the mock crash event.

"If we can save one life, it will matter," he said.

Mill developers need zoning board help

Tourister mill plan requires special use permits, six variances from zoning code

BY TED HAYES

thayes@eastbaynewspapers.com

The would-be developers of the American Tourister complex will be back before the town next week looking for a host of variances and special use permits for their large residential, commercial and office development in north Warren.

Principals of Tourister Mill LLC hope to turn the former Warren Manufacturing Co. mill into a development consisting of nearly 300 apartment units and as much as 94,000 square feet of office and commercial space. And while the Warren Planning Board has already given Master Plan approval to the project and will review it at least twice more, the Warren Zoning Board will meet for the first time Wednesday, May 21, to discuss several crucial requests.

First, developers need three special use permits to develop the property; such permits are needed as a matter of course for any similar type of construction in the mill's zone. The variances are a different story. The plan for the old mill deviates from Warren zoning ordinances in six areas, and developers are looking for the following:

- A variance from dimensional requirements for construction in the waterfront zone.
- A variance is being sought to exempt the project from a section of the ordinance that prohibits nonconforming structures (like the mill) that lie in special flood hazard areas from being enlarged or expanded.

Developers need a half dozen variances to build their American Tourister redevelopment as planned.

■ Another variance would allow buildings to be set closer than 200 feet from a floodway (the Warren River).

■ Developers are looking for a variance on the number of off street parking spaces. In all, zoning codes would require 892 parking spaces at the development; developers are looking to install 733 spaces.

■ A variance is being sought for the ordinance's parking lot requirements, which require one "island" for every eight parking spaces. The amount of parking lot to be landscaped is also at issue.

■ Finally, the developers seek a reduction in the total number of loading spaces/docks required.

Even after the zoning board considers the application, there are several other layers of town review. The planning board must grant the project preliminary and final plan approval, and the building official must give the project a permit. Outside of Warren, there are several issues as well, including the developers reaching a final deal with the State of Rhode Island over tax credits. The developers recently got word that they'll be granted $5 million in historic tax credits to help fund the project; however, the deal with the state has not yet been signed. Approvals for parts of the project will also be needed from the Rhode Island Department of Environmental Management and state Coastal Resources and Management Council (CRMC).

The plan is to complete the project in two phases. The first would include approximately 200 apartment units in the main mill building, while the second would see an additional 100 or so apartment built in a new structure that would rise on the site of the current metal-roofed warehouse at the south of the property.

Building inspector resigns

Bill Nash had been in Warren for nearly a decade

BY TED HAYES

thayes@eastbaynewspapers.com

Members of the Warren Town Council were expected Tuesday night to start the search for a new building inspector, a week after Warren's current official, William Nash, submitted his resignation.

Mr. Nash, who had been employed by the Town of Warren for nearly 10 years, submitted his resignation letter last Wednesday, May 7, but said he will stay on until Friday, June 4, to help the town in its transition.

"I'll try to assist as much as I can," he said Tuesday morning.

Mr. Nash, who lives in Middletown, has accepted a job with the International Code Council, the non-profit organization that develops and writes building code for the United States and internationally. He will be the council's new government relations manager for the New England region.

"It's the ideal job for me, just a continuation of what I've been doing," said Mr. Nash, who will resign his post as president of the Rhode Island Building Officials Association when he starts at the council early next month.

The job will be quite a change for Mr. Nash, who worked as Middletown's inspector before coming to Warren and in total, has spent about 30 years in the industry. He said the job in Warren has become increasingly difficult in recent years, as he has been asked to take on additional duties above and beyond that of issuing permits and doing site inspections.

"The inspection part, the permits is easy," he said. "Zoning enforcement stuff is what has bogged down my job."

Mr. Nash has asked for several years for a code compliance officer to assist with the workload, but the position has never been funded. Going forward, he believes the town would be wise to fund the position, despite Warren's tough financial position.

"I think one person can handle it with an assistant," he said. "If I had an assistant, I could send that person out to investigate complaints. If there were an assistant here, it would take a little bit of the heat or the pressure off the person in this office to get the job done."

Finding someone to fill his shoes might be an issue, at least in the short term. There are currently no fewer than four towns in Rhode Island looking to hire a building inspector — Warren, Woonsocket, Tiverton and North Providence. Town Manager Thomas Gordon said his colleague's resignation comes at a critical time for Warren, which has several large developments coming down the pike.

Mr. Gordon has already spoken to officials at the State Building Commission, and will devise a plan for temporary inspection help while a permanent replacement is sought. He said the search will undoubtedly take more than the one month Mr. Nash has given.

"We've got to be very deliberate," Mr. Gordon said. "I think there has to be a full-time employee in that position soon, given what's about to occur in Warren."

Mr. Nash took over from former building official William Hanley. Perhaps his biggest challenge during his tenure came from a Touisset couple, Jeffrey and Linda Wyrstek, who claimed he violated their civil rights during his review of a dream home they built.

The Wyrsteks sued the town and Mr. Nash in Rhode Island Superior Court; but ultimately, that suit was thrown out last year by Judge William E. Smith, who had this to say about Mr. Nash's style:

"Perhaps Nash could ... be fairly characterized as a pain in the back-side." However, "the record indicates that Nash's demands ... while undoubtedly burdensome, were sought in good faith to require strict adherence to municipal building code."

"The nature of my job is to have to tell people 'no' on many occasions," he said. "In this job, you can't be a mind reader."

However, Mr. Nash said he enjoyed the work and believes he is leaving the office in good hands. Clerk Diane Soares and assistant Catherine Gresh are excellent clerks, he said, and "the office will be in good hands with them going forward."

Funeral director switches teams

Ray Romano spent years at family business, before settling with Smith

BY TED HAYES

thayes@eastbaynewspapers.com

Ray Romano is back doing what he loves, with a former competitor who has become a good friend and business partner.

Mr. Romano spent most of his professional life at his family's Wilbur Romano Funeral Home on Main Street. But after leaving the former family business, he has found a home at Smith Funeral and Memorial Services on Schoolhouse Road, where the well-known Warren native has worked as a funeral director for the past seven months.

"It's been great," said Cathie Tattrie, who runs Smith. "For me it's a perfect fit. Ray's been a great asset because he is such big part of the community."

Mr. Romano grew up in the family funeral home on Main Street that was founded by his grandfather John. His father Pio took over when he was a kid, and Ray said he would have been happy to live out his years in the business. But things started to change a little over a decade ago, when the family sold the business to the Lowen funeral home holding company. Though the Romanos continued to operate the funeral home after the sale, a shift occurred after Lowen was itself bought out about six years ago by Service Corporation International, the nation's largest funeral home holding company. Mr. Romano stuck it out another five years or so before deciding to leave in 2011.

"Things just changed and I wasn't as excited about coming to work as I had been," he said.

But he grew up in Warren and still has many, many friends here, and it wasn't long before people started suggesting he go to Smith, which has been in town since before the turn of the 20th century and for most of its life was based on Church Street. So one day he picked up the phone, met with Ms. Tattrie and settled on an arrangement. Having Mr. Romano come in was almost seamless, she said.

"To be honest, I was completely shocked about how well he fit in," she said. "It was mostly getting to know each other. You always imagine you do things differently (than your competitors). But he fit right in."

Since then, not much has changed for Mr. Romano. He enjoys the work and still gets the same satisfaction that he always did out of what can be a very challenging job.

"It's the satisfaction of helping people at what is often their weakest, most vulnerable time. One of the nicest things I've heard over the years is, 'Thank you for making such a difficult time easier.'"

Bridging the gap

One of the main arguments made against tolls on the new Sakonnet River Bridge — other than the negative impact on businesses and the inherent unfairness of having one region shoulder the bulk of the cost of maintaining state structures — has been that Rhode Island shouldn't increase tolls while it lacks a funding formula for maintaining its own bridges.

Decades of piecing together maintenance funds or, worse, allowing bridges to fall into disrepair, may finally be coming to an end. The Senate Finance Committee recently approved a bill that establishes an infrastructure fund for bridge and transportation maintenance. Of particular interest to those in the East Bay and on Aquidneck Island, the bill calls for no tolls to be imposed on the Sakonnet River and Mt. Hope bridges.

The infrastructure bill — which still must be passed by the full Senate and the state House of Representatives — would begin building funds in fiscal 2016, adding an amount equal to all the RI Department of Transportation debt, which would be funneled from the motor fuel tax. Beginning in fiscal 2019 and in each year going forward, $45 million of the motor fuel tax would be deposited into the infrastructure fund. The General Assembly would also reserve the right to transfer more money from the state general fund to cover shortfalls.

In a related move, the RI Turnpike and Bridge Authority voted recently to delay toll increases on the Sakonnet River Bridge, scheduled to increase from 10 cents to 50 cents (EZ-Pass rate) on May 16. The infrastructure funding bill would make the increase moot, as it would eliminate tolls on all four East Bay bridges — Sakonnet and Mt. Hope, along with Newport and Jamestown Verrazano bridges.

The bill, sponsored by East Bay Sens. Louis DiPalma and Walter Felag Jr., finally overturns decades of short-sightedness on the part of RI's elected legislators. They've approved millions to build the needed bridges that connect a state split in half by a large bay, but made little effort to see they remain standing, akin to buying a new car and refusing to ever change the oil.

Bridge tolls have been a temporary fix that depend on a very small percentage of the population to protect state assets. The bridges belong to all Rhode Islanders, so all Rhode Islanders should take part in their maintenance. The full Senate and House should quickly pass the infrastructure bill and end the toll battle at last.

A 'historic' rising tide lifts all boats

To the editor:

On Saturday, April 26, 2014, the 29th annual Rhode Island Statewide Historic Preservation Conference was held in Warren. An amazing 530 people, many of whom had never before visited Warren, spent the day exploring our town. Despite the rain, visitors walked Warren's historic streets, biked the East Bay bike path, explored Warren's rural landscapes, and experienced the beauty of our waterfront by boat.

Visitors learned about adaptive reuse projects, such as the Hope & Main kitchen incubator at the Main Street School. Participants had the opportunity to visit galleries, artist studios at the Cutler Mills, and Second Story Theatre. Also, there were sessions on the archeology of Burr's Hill Park, preserving our working waterfront, and creating sustainable garden landscapes.

The day proved that community and preservation are one and the same. One conference participant that toured Warren's "Small Gems," which included the Maxwell House, Narragansett Fire Station #3, Federal Blues, the Masonic Temple, and George Hail Library, noted that having involved volunteers and citizens on site made the tour more meaningful. The key note speaker, R. Mark Fenton, emphasized that historic communities like Warren, with its traditional neighborhood patterns, are conducive to healthier lifestyles, and that preservation can indeed be a partner in public health policy.

In short, the conference demonstrated that historic preservation is an inclusive endeavor. Although it certainly protects historic buildings, preservation is about more than windows and clapboards. Pride in our collective history and culture is a common interest for the many citizens who volunteer their time to promote and maintain our historic venues. Historic preservation activities stabilize property values, promote tourism, and create jobs. And most importantly, preservation has the potential to support active and healthy communities that protect the past while promoting a sustainable future for all of us.

Cool Moose will run — if you want him to

To the editor:

As the deadline for declarations of candidacy nears, many asked my intentions as to running for Lieutenant Governor. After long consideration and deliberation, my intention is to decline.

This decision engendered hundreds of conversations urging me to reconsider. I have, and still find myself inclined to say no, but this is not only about me. I have come to understand that after an almost a three decade quest to better the system, there are many dedicated followers of the cause.

To date no one has taken up the mantle of smaller government and the elimination of the office of Lieutenant Governor. In politics it is extremely difficult to cry uncle, admit defeat, and suffer the guilt of feeling you have left work unfinished and let down supporters. The vacuum in assuming a leadership role in this cause has heightened my guilt about not running for Lieutenant Governor.

I am quite happy with my present life and see no reason to tilt at windmills once again in a misguided effort to right the ship of state full of people who really do not care enough about themselves. At this point in my life, it seems sheer folly to re-enter the political arena.

As I age, I feel that I may lack the vision and energy I once possessed when seeking the reins of government. It may be time for fresh horses to finish whatever it is that I may have started, but where no fresh horses are found, an old warhorse is better than none.

Inside me, personal happiness is clashing with the guilt of unfinished business.

I have listed what I see as the positives and negatives of a candidacy.

PRO: Could make a change; wouldn't let down dedicated supporters; wouldn't lose established momentum; great ego boost. CON: Happy with present situation; no longer excited by politics; age has sapped energy.

Realistically, it seems to be a no-brainer to stay out of politics. Still, I suffer the pangs of guilt that this choice would incur. I truly respect my supporters for their years in the trenches.

A middle ground solution seems to be this. I will not run unless my supporters clearly make it evident that they want me to run. This would mean a draft movement.

Since I would be making a large personal sacrifice of time, energy, and money to enter this race, I must determine that such is truly the desire of my supporters. As such, I will ask that a draft petition be signed by 3,000* registered Rhode Island voters (to be verified). Any less would free me from my candidacy and ease my conscience. In short, if accomplished by June 15, 2014, I will run. If not, I will remain on the sideline, gladly.

I am reluctant to run but I will leave that up to my supporters. If they honestly feel that I should sacrifice for the welfare of the state, I will do so, and I will engage with all the vigor of my past efforts. If not, so be it and thank you for your past support.

Although this may seem like a gimmick, I assure you it is not. I feel this is the only way I can both follow my conscience and be true to the people who genuinely support my vision for government.

The Draft Healey petition can be signed on change.org or people can send me their opinion (including their name and address) to:

Get to know wildlife on the Warren Bristol line

To the editor:

If you want to walk in a wildlife refuge and enjoy nature, you can get there by bus.

On Saturdays, going between Providence and Newport every half hour and on Sundays and holidays every 35-50 minutes, you can take the #60 RIPTA bus and get off at the Warren-Bristol town line for the Audubon Environmental Education Center.

There you can enjoy trails, which are free, or explore the museum for a fee. The trails lead to a butterfly garden, through a meadow of wildflowers, onto a boardwalk through a red maple swamp where you may catch a glimpse of a turtle or frog, across the bike path, and through a salt marsh to the edge of Narragansett Bay. Birds, flowers, plants, and the sky await your visit. Many programs are offered at the center and those can be found on Audubon's website www.asri.org.

Weekdays the bus from Kennedy Plaza runs more frequently. Evening return service on RIPTA is hourly. Find the schedule at www.ripta.com. Bus fares do not cover the full cost of the vehicle, driver, maintenance, and fuel. Part of the gasoline tax is the state's contribution to keeping buses on the road and meeting an effective schedule. If there were more money and more riders, perhaps there could be more frequent service.

Audubon has worked with the Coalition for Transportation Choices for 3 years trying to get a more stable funding than the gasoline tax to fund RIPTA.

We hope you will call your state rep and senator to tell them about your desire to get into nature by bus and request for them to support better funding for RIPTA (S-2335 and H-7432) in the General Assembly in 2014.

The intellectuals are out of touch

To the editor:

It was interesting to read former RI Senator David Carlin's May 7 letter to the editor, "URI has its own definition of diversity"—especially since it's noteworthy to see a college professor pointing out how much "sillier and sillier" academia becomes.

Condi Rice, a very intelligent and talented black woman, being denied the right to free speech at Rutgers is perhaps understandable: her being part of the Bush/America and Blair/England coalition that had the audacity to depose the left's beloved atrocity-committing tyrant Saddam Hussein before he could go on to develop nuclear weapons, once France — in order to do oil business with Iraq — did away with UN sanctions.

But...for Brandeis to revoke its invitation to Ayaan Hirsi Ali, the black Somalian woman who continues to speak out for the rights of women and girls despite threats from radical Islamic terrorists, has to be the epitome of displaying for all to see what nonsense clueless college professors, with nothing productive to do, can come up with.

Thanks for helping family

To the editor:

On March 14, my brother Danny and his family lost their house due to a fire in Mapleville, R.I. Fortunately everyone made it out of the house, but they lost everything. My wife and I obviously wanted to help them, so we planned and held a Steak Fry at our home in Warren on April, 27. In an effort to raise as much money as we could, we also held a raf-file at the benefit. We reached out to the community and were amazed at the support that we received from so many local businesses from Bristol, Warren, Barrington and Providence that generously donated gift certificates and merchandise for this cause. Some businesses also donated food for the steak fry. In addition to ticket sales, we were able to raise a lot more money thanks to their donations! We would like this opportunity to thank those that donated. Thank you also for those that attended the event and helped to make it so successful.

POLICE REPORT

Strong arm robbery at Launder N' Luxury, worst landlord ever

Monday, May 5

A man called from Davis Street to report that a woman was trying to hit him. Police came out, but neither wanted to press charges.

A large, possibly injured osprey was called in on Franklin Street. The animal control officer wasn't able to get close enough to tell if the bird was injured, as a caller suspected.

A toolbox was stolen from a car on Child Street.

A Central Street man complained that some unknown person was taking his prescriptions.

Off-road vehicles were reported driving on Taddy Avenue.

Police were called to a "large disturbance" on Water Street. It turned out to be kids playing around. There was no real problem.

A woman from Cutler Street called police and asked for advice on how to ask her mother to move out of her apartment.

A barking dog call came in from Main Street.

Someone on Market Street complained about a person revving his car's engine.

Police noted that the owner was working on the car in his garage.

Police were called to Davis Street for a domestic disturbance. It turned out to be a mother yelling at her children.

Tuesday, May 6

Sean P. Dixon, 21, of Shrewsbury, Ma., was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs, BAC .15 or greater, after police pulled him over on Kickemuit Road at 1 a.m.

A Martin Street woman called with suspicions that someone was going through her mail.

Mitchell Scott Small, 40, of South Dennis, Mass., was charged with domestic simple assault/battery and domestic disorderly conduct, after police were called to Market Street just after 6 p.m. for a disturbance.

Someone complained about kids playing with BB guns on Homestead Avenue.

Joshua Almeida, 27, of 62 Union St., was charged with domestic disorderly conduct and resisting arrest, after police were called to Union Street for a disturbance.

Police were called to Norbert Street for a neighborhood dispute. Turns out one of those involved was drunk; police said there was no problem.

Wednesday, May 7

Someone stole a bike from a Main Street address.

Christina Sargeant, 19, of Greenwich, Conn., was charged with unlawful drinking/ID card misuse, after a worker at a Metacom Avenue establishment called to report seizing a possible fake ID.

Someone complained that four people on Everett Street were running vacuums outside. Sorry, there was no more information on the log ... we would like to know too!

Police got a loud music/TV complaint from Metacom Avenue.

Thursday, May 8

Someone spotted a cat stuck in a storm drain off the East Bay Bike Path, and called the animal control officer.

Police got a call about a strong arm robbery at the Launder N Luxury on Main Street. Police said that just before 3 p.m. a tall black male wearing a grey hoodie, work gloves, baseball cap, blue jean shorts and Nike sneakers approached a clerk at the register and asked for change. When she opened the register, he allegedly grabbed money and fled down Water Street. Police are trying to obtain surveillance footage from the laundromat's security company.

Police dispersed a group of kids from Water Street.

Friday, May 9

Police arrested Justin W. Chiellini, 28, of 173 Water St., Apt. 1, charging him on a warrant for obtaining money under false pretenses. The arrest stems from an incident that allegedly occurred months back, when Mr. Chiellini allegedly showed an apartment to the victim, a prospective tenant, and took a downpayment. After several weeks passed, the complainant tried and failed to follow through but was unable to reach Mr. Chiellini; later, he drove by and saw a "For Sale" sign on the home. Police said Mr. Chiellini was acquainted with the home's owner, but did not own it himself.

Police picked up Mark A. Lacharite, 49 of 20 Union St., on a warrant for disorderly conduct (exposing his genitals). Back in April, neighbors complained after they saw him urinating out of his second floor window. An officer who came out saw evidence in the dirt consistent with the neighbors' claims.

Police helped a mother whose child had gotten his hand stuck in a vase. That's better than a vise.

Saturday, May 10

Police were called out to Baker Street for a family disturbance.

Police were called out to Main Street at 12:46 a.m. for a man who was yelling in the middle of the road. Turned out he was locked out of his apartment and was trying to get someone's attention.

Jonathan A. Cioe, 38, of 285A Market St., was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol, BAC .15 or greater, after police pulled him over on Metacom Avenue at 1:05 a.m.

A Roseland Avenue man called police at 3:26 a.m. to report hearing people in his back yard.

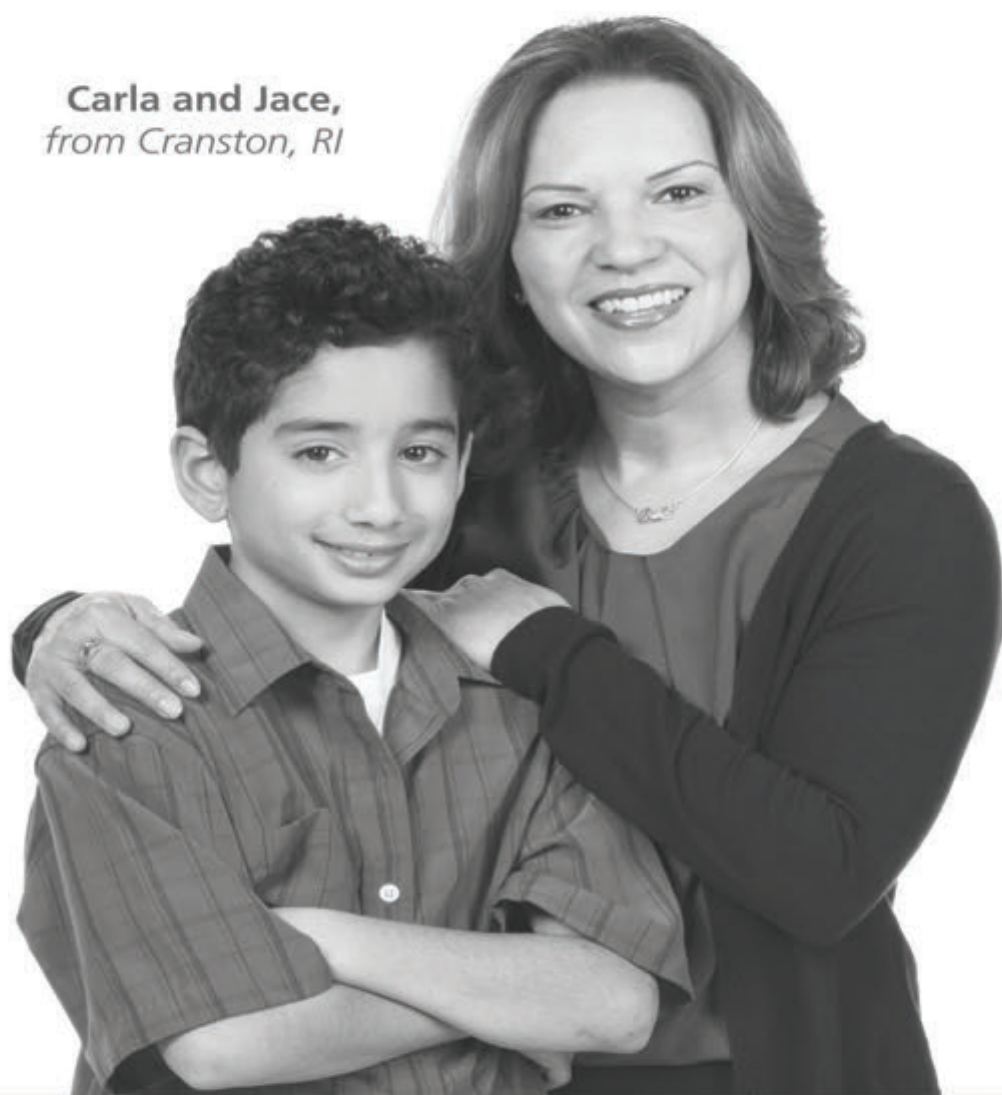

A Bradford Street woman called the police to report an unknown animal under her porch. It turned out to be a groundhog.

A Haile Street woman reported telephone harassment.

A Market Street resident complained that workers nearby were using loud equipment. Police came out, measured the noise with a meter, and found no violation.

'Sylvia' is at hit at 2nd Story Theatre, more performances added

'Becky's Car' takes her on an adventure — UpStage through June 1

2nd Story Theatre has two venues — DownStage and UpStage — at the theater at 28 Market St.

"Sylvia" by A.R. Gurney Jr. is now DownStage. Tickets to the first extension were snapped up faster than a dog chasing a bone, so 2nd Story has unleashed more performances to meet unprecedented demand.

Performances are at 8 p.m. Thursdays to Saturdays and at 3 p.m. Sundays through June 1, with an extra performance on Wednesday, May 28. Performances are sold out through May 21.

Dramatic literature is stuffed with memorable love scenes, but none is as immediately delicious, dizzy and howlingly funny as the one that begins the redeeming affair in this clever and endearing comedy.

Greg, whose career as a financial trader is winding down, brings home a dog he finds in the park bearing only the name "Sylvia" on her tag. What follows is a modern romantic comedy about midlife, marriage and a dog.

"Becky's New Car" by Steven Dietz is UpStage through June 1. Discussion Sunday is on May 18, with a humanities discussion immediately following the 2:30 p.m. performance.

Performances are at 7:30 p.m. Thursdays to Saturdays and at 2:30 p.m. Sundays.

Have you ever been tempted to flee your own life? Becky Foster is caught in middle age, middle management and in a middling marriage, with no prospects for change on the horizon. Then one day, Becky is offered nothing short of a new life. And the audience is offered a chance to ride shotgun in a way that most plays wouldn't dare.

Regular ticket prices are $25; $20 for age 21 and under. For more information or tickets, visit the box office, call 247-4200 or e-mail boxoffice@2ndStoryTheatre.com. Check the website at www.2ndStoryTheatre.com.

The summer season

And, for those who can't wait to hear what the summer will bring. Here's the rundown on the summer offerings.

DownStage in June will be "Freud's Last Session" by Mark St. Germain. Legendary psychoanalyst Dr. Sigmund Freud invites the rising Oxford Don C.S. Lewis to his home in London.

There, the two clash about love, sex, the existence of God, and the meaning of life. It's a deeply touching play filled with humor that explores the minds, hearts and souls of two brilliant men addressing some of the greatest questions of all time. Performances are from June 6 to 29.

UpStage Rep in July and August will be the popular "And Then There Were None (aka 'Ten Little Indians')" by Agatha Christie and "Hay Fever" by Noel Coward.

Ten guilty strangers are trapped on an island in "And Then There Were None." One by one they are accused of murder; one by one they start to die. A mystery classic. Performances are from July 11 to Aug. 29.

In "Hay Fever," novelist David Bliss, and his retired actress wife, Judith, are hoping for a quiet family weekend in the country. But, they find that's an impossible dream when their high-spirited children descend with guests of their own. A houseful of high comedic drama waits to be ignited as egos erupt and tempers flare. A comedy classic. Performances are from July 18 to Aug. 31.

Tickets are $30 each. A three-play subscription is $75. Previews (the first three performances) are $10 each only online or in person, in cash, in advance, at the box office.

Sea glass jewelry workshop and programs on native plants and seaweed at the Audubon Center

It's a great time of year to take the kids on an exploration of the great outdoors at the Audubon Society of Rhode Island's Environmental Education Center at 1401 Hope St. on the Bristol/Warren town line.

The center also features a life-sized model of a Right Whale, harbor seal display, marine and freshwater aquarium exhibits, tide pool tank, along with trails and a boardwalk to the bay on the 28-acre wildlife refuge. The center is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday to Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday.

The usual admission fee is $6 for adults, $5 for seniors and $4 for children 4 to 12 years (under 4 are free). However, it is waived on the first Saturday of each month for Free Family Fun Day courtesy of a grant from the Citizens Bank Foundation.

For more information, call 245-7500 or visit www.asriec.org. To register for programs call 949-5454, ext. 0, or register online at www.asri.org.

■ A sea glass jewelry workshop for adults is from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Saturday, May 17. Create a beautiful pendant with sea glass found on local beaches.

Learn how to choose the right piece of glass and transform it into fun, creative jewelry using quick and easy wire wrapping techniques. The program includes all materials; but, if you found something special on the beach, bring it.

Registration is required as space is limited to 12 participants and classes fill quickly. The fee is $30 ($25 members). Register online. More classes are coming up on June 4, 14 and 28.

■ "From the Mountains to the Sea: Plants, Trees, and Shrubs of New England" is open from May 18 to June 28. View the New England Society of Botanical Artists' juried exhibition of native plant portraits during regular center hours.

Celebrate the diversity and beauty of plants from our own backyards. An opening reception is Sunday, May 18, from 1 to 3 p.m. The exhibit is free with admission.

■ "Say It With Seaweed Instead!" a lecture about the R.I. Seaweed Biodiversity Project, is by Brian Wynsor, Ph.D., an associate professor of biology at Roger Williams University, from 7 to 8 p.m. on Wednesday, May 21. Come learn about the effort to document every species of Rhode Island seaweed using a method known as DNA bar-coding. The lecture is free, but register online at www.asri.org.

■ "Explore the Nature of Prudence Island" from 9:45 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday, May 21, on Prudence Island. It's a great introduction to the incredibly rich diversity of wildlife, ecosystems and history on the island. Enjoy a guided van trip exploring various habitats and trails, learning about the wildlife and plants.

The walking trails are simple to moderate and it's an easy pace as you will be looking for birds, butterflies, reptiles, amphibians and plants.

The fee is $12 for adults and $6 for children 10 and older only ($8/$4 members). For details on traveling to Prudence Island, visit the events calendar at www.asri.org. Register online at www.asri.org. The program will repeat on May 31 and June 14.

Send us your college graduation notice

If you want to let Warren know that you (or your child) are graduating, now is the time to get the information to the Warren Times-Gazette. Some colleges and universities do not include parents' names, honors received or employment plans, and most do not include photographs.

Due to the large volume of notices, the Warren Times can only print a graduation notice once. So, submit additional information or a photograph as soon as possible. We need digital photos e-mailed or sent on a disc as a high-resolution jpg or tif. Or, we accept glossy photographs (not those with a matte finish). We will begin running the notices in June as space permits, and will print all the students from a particular university or college together when we receive the list from the college (so, please be patient).

Drop off any material at the office, 1 Bradford St., Bristol; mail it to Community News, P.O. Box 90, Bristol, RI 02809, fax it to 253-6055 or e-mail it to lyndarego@eastbaynewspapers.com. Include a phone number where you can be reached during the day. For more information, call 253-6000, ext. 107.

VOTE: Town awaits court ruling

ating and school budget sits at $23.63 million, of which 55 percent would go to the school department. The proposed tax rate currently stands at $18.67 per $1,000 valuation; that is a 7.9 percent increase in the town's tax levy hike, twice what the state allows.

Since the Town of Warren has already received approval from the state to exceed the maximum tax levy cap of 4 percent, voters will have limited flexibility for adding items to the budget during Financial Town Meeting on Monday. For instance, if they hope to add $30,000 back in to the recreation department, officials will have to find $30,000 elsewhere to cut.

As always, the meeting will be held at 7 p.m. at the Kickemuit Middle School. A quorum of 125 voters is required, or else the budget passes as is. Town officials will wait until 7:30 p.m. to allow people to arrive. Then, they'll count heads and either start the meeting or pass the budget as is.

Roots in the ground

RICHARD W. DIONNE JR.

Gary Watros with tulips from just a few of the 2000 spring bulbs that were planted last fall in a garden he designed at the First Congregational Church in Bristol.

Bristol's Gary Watros could put a man on the moon, or 2000 bulbs in a garden — it's all in a day's work

BY CHRISTY NADALIN
cnadalin@eastbaynewspapers.com

Watros rejects the term "Renaissance man" in general, and certainly any attempt to slap that label on him, as though he was unique in some way. "In our age you can't be a Renaissance man; there's so much to know out there," he says.

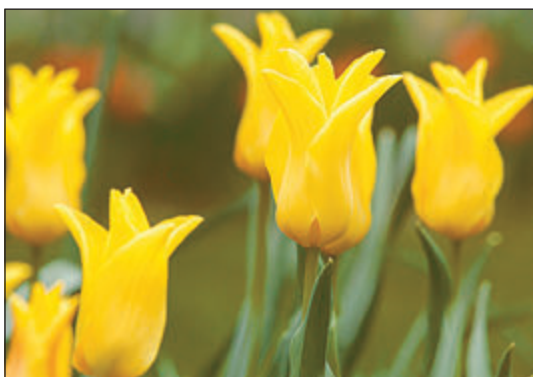

As though every Tom, Dick and Harry was a master gardener, historian, volunteer, minister, world traveler, landscape architect, cook, teacher, interior designer, collector, husband, father, and aeronautical engineer who spent 1964-1970 at NASA Mission Control in Houston.

It's not a new concept: the term for people who enjoy expertise in multiple disciplines is "polymath," which is Greek for "having learned much." A sound name, though not as appealing as the one that invokes that period of art, learning and humanism, a fundamental tenant of which was expressed by Leon Battista Alberti, a fifteenth-century Italian architect (and a bunch of other things) as "A man can do all things if he will."

People who are interested in things make interesting people; people you like to listen to, who make learning fun. Luckily for them, Watros enjoys working with students; whether teaching fourth-graders about Bristol's architectural heritage through Mosaico's "Sense of Pride" program or sharing his collections of historical radios, cameras, and phones, he possesses an encyclopedic knowledge of a remarkable variety of subjects. The first (and to date, only) male member of the Bristol Garden Club, Watros ran a program through the Guiteras School that combined his love of American history, gardening, and specimen trees.

Working with a group of third graders, he gave history lessons on the Civil War, the Apollo program and the Wright Brothers, that were followed by the planting of trees whose seeds came from a tree under which Abraham Lincoln passed the day he delivered the Gettysburg Address, orbited the Moon on Apollo 14, and "witnessed" the first flight at Kitty Hawk in 1903. Those trees and others are on the Guiteras campus and at Thomas park. Watros' own yard contains "children" of the last surviving tree planted by Johnny Appleseed; the Angel Oak, the oldest tree east of the California redwoods; a tulip poplar planted by George Washington; and an oak that was planted a century ago outside the Alamo (though that seedling may not have survived our rough winter.)

Watros and his historic trees live on High Street, along with his wife Beverly, in an exquisite 1830's home that has been lovingly restored in his 16 years of occupancy. Each room represents a distinct architectural period, and Watros has paid remarkable attention to detail to each unique space: everything from furnishings to fixtures, colors and wall coverings, are appropriate to the represented era.

It's that attention to detail that provides a glimpse into Watros' former career, which landed him front and center of some of the most iconic moments in American history. Or, as he nonchalantly calls it, ticking down the list of some of the topics on which he speaks with some frequency, "the NASA thing."

"The NASA thing," specifically, was Watros' years as the man responsible for the Lunar Module environmental, electrical, communications, pyrotechnic and backpack systems from 1964-1970, at NASA Mission Control in Houston. That time period encompasses Apollo missions 1 through 14; the Lunar Module being the vehicle that carried Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin to the surface of the moon; and served as a life raft for Jim Lovell, Jack Swigert, and Fred Haise in the Apollo 13 "successful failure." Watros' team was central to solving the many problems that cropped up following the abortion of that mission, until the crew was safely returned to Earth. Fans of the film recall how harrowing it was to watch those scenes, even while knowing there would be a happy resolution. Watros lived it, with no such assurances.

"Getting through Apollo 13 was tough," he said. "And we came closer to losing them than the world will ever know."

Those days behind him, Watros finds himself as busy as ever. And while his earthly pursuits don't typically require his "rocket scientist" credentials, they still find their way out from time to time. He's unafraid to tackle home repairs that would send other men running for experts (we're talking systems, not trim paint), and one look at the structure he built for his bean crop (which yielded 50 pounds last summer alone) will tell you that Watros is not the average gardener. "Yeah," he laughs, examining the architecture of his impressive tower of bean, "you can tell an engineer lives here."

POLI-TICKS

Getting up on the right side of the bed

My beloved mother used to tell us children that we should always get up on the "right side of the bed." She wanted us to start each day anew with a happy attitude. So, it is that after all these years, I follow her advice except for every once in a while when the news is so bad that it makes me cranky first thing in the morning. The news on May 3rd most recently turned me into a grump. Here's why:

■ The Rhode Island Supreme Court allowed John Cicilline, brother of the Congressman, to resume his law practice. The Court reasoned that the disbarred lawyer "received no financial benefit" from the orchestration of a courthouse corruption scheme. Yet, the indictment to which he pled guilty said he received a payment of $15,000 and pressured his client for more money to the tune of $100,000. Because he was caught he never received the $100 G's installment and had to pay the equivalent of the $15,000 as restitution so that equates to "no financial benefit" in the tortured reasoning of the court. Fortunately, the Federal Court didn't roll over like Fido so Mr. Cicilline remains disbarred before that bench.

■ Brown University president, Christina Paxson, formed a task force to deal with the problem of handling sexual assaults on campus. This action followed another embarrassing revelation of the handling of an alleged rape case through the University mechanism wherein the victim claimed that she was discouraged from reporting the crime to law enforcement. Brown University had this same problem some 28-29 years ago when I was attorney general. In order to create the façade of a "peaceful and safe campus" Brown University was uncooperative with law enforcement despite a sex ring operation and other sundry activities. In announcing the task force the President filled it with all insiders and not one law enforce-

DOWN TO EARTH

Go vagabonding in your own Mayscape

One of my favorite garden writers, the late great Janet Gillespie, Westport author and columnist for the New Bedford Standard Times, said of May, "in the garden seeds are coming up, weeds are proliferating, new plants arrive to be tended to and there are a hundred jobs to do. Don't do them. Like Mole in Wind in the Willows, drop everything and go vagabonding." She recommended taking walks in wild places, alone, at our own pace to explore the merry month of May. "Escape the demands of your household," she wrote, "and get acquainted with yourself again."

I'm all for a May vagabond (who wouldn't be?) and I relish alone-time but find it as difficult to exit my garden gate in May as I do in September. Not because there's so much to do (it can wait) but because there's so much right here to watch unfold and change, and because the light has that sweet golden tinge. So my advice, based on Jan's, is to put snips, spade and trowel away, and at least take some slow, restorative strolls through your own Mayscape. Pause often. Pack a picnic.

My walk takes me past some tiny clumps of fumewort (an unfortunate common name for Corydalis solida), which has smoky mauve flower spikelets and foggy blue-green foliage. Planted near it is a dainty spreading groundcover called white inside-out flower (Vancouveria hexandra), with duck foot-shaped leaves on the most delicate wire stems, and flowers that I guess I already missed. (Are they really inside-out? Let that be a lesson to me to start vagabonding in April.) Both thrive underneath an alternate-leaved dogwood (Cornus alternifolia), which, right now, has tiny pleated, red-edged leaves cupping mere nubbins of flower buds. Its foliage is as adorable in miniature as baby toes and as fuzzy as puppy ears. Aside from squee-inducing cuteness, fur on foliage provides protection from a scorching sun (its low angle this time of year can burn gardeners' tender skin too) and untimely frosts (perish the thought).

Speaking of miniature, before taking possession of a property inhabited by a native flowering dogwood (Cornus florida) I was never aware of how the knobby little buds on every twig end crack open into four-petaled "flowers" (they're bracts, actually, surrounding the true flower) that start out the size of kitten noses and grow bigger, bigger, bigger by the day. Right now, the luminous creamy pale-green bracts, only the size of a cat's paw, look like eyelet lace from a distance. But, almost as soon as you read this, every flowering dogwood in town will be a thick canvas of flowers, each about 2" across.

Fairy wings (also known as barrenwort — another terrible name — or Epimedium spp.) grow in the dry soil of my dogwood's dapple. Talk about adorable. Last month I cut back old foliage (still greenish despite winter's worst) just in time to see the eensiest fist-like buds break the soil's surface. Since then, wiry stems elongated and thumbnail-sized flowers shaped like court jester caps began shivering in the barest breezes over heart-shaped leaves, some mottled burgundy, others edged with red, all batting eyelashes along the edges. Eyelashes! I have no idea what purpose those might serve but they sure are cute.

That's the thing about spring. It's darling. And soft. So shiny and new. (Some foliage emerges with a smooth polish instead of peach fuzz---reflectiveness probably offering a similar protection from sun scorch.) And gardeners otherwise harried by the season may find solace in solitary investigation and contemplation of its cuteness. So please do as Janet Gillespie "The Carefree Gardener" and I suggest: drop everything right now and enjoy it.

Kristin Green is the interpretive horticulturist at Blithewold Mansion, Gardens & Arboretum and author of "Plantiful: Start Small, Grow Big with 150 Plants that Spread, Self-Sow, and Overwinter" (Timber Press). Follow Blithewold's garden blog at blog.blithewold.org.

A new roo at the zoo

Roger Williams Park Zoo has announced the birth of a Matschie's tree kangaroo. This is the first tree roo birth at the Zoo in over 20 years, and one of only three that were born in captivity in the U.S. over the last year. Tree roos are an endangered species, and are part of RWP Zoo's Species Survival Program — a cooperative breeding program through the Association of Zoos and Aquariums (AZA) that aims to rehabilitate endangered and threatened species populations.

Indigenous to the rainforests of Papua New Guinea, it is estimated that there are less than 2,500 Matschie's tree kangaroos left in the wild, because of factors like habitat loss due to logging and mining, as well as hunting. Currently, there are only 53 tree roos in the U.S. living in captivity, and seven in international facilities.

Along with their tree roo breeding program, the RWP Zoo has also supported and worked with the Tree Kangaroo Conservation Program (TKCP) since its inception. The TKCP is an organization with the mission of establishing an officially recognized conservation area in Papua New Guinea for tree roos to live without human interference.

Zoo keepers discovered that their female tree kangaroo was pregnant after the announcement of the plans to build a new tree roo exhibit in the Australasia building by spring 2014. "The first six months after birth is a critical time for both mother and baby. For this reason, we have put construction of the new exhibit on hold until late June 2014," said Zoo Executive Director, Dr. Jeremy Goodman, DVM. The exhibit will feature indoor and outdoor viewing areas with easy access for the animals between both spaces, giving guests a much improved view of the animals. Opening of the new exhibit is planned for early fall.

Until the exhibit is completed, images of the baby roo's development in the pouch will be displayed in the Australasia building so Zoo visitors can appreciate the baby's first months of life.

Visit the new roo (or his pictures, anyway) at the Roger Williams Park Zoo, 1000 Elmwood Ave., Providence. Open daily 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. For more information visit rwpzoo.org.

Lone shipwreck survivor to tell his story

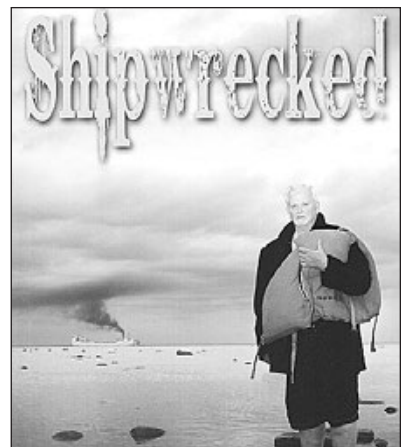

Nine years before the wreck of the storied SS Edmund Fitzgerald, there was the SS Daniel J Morrell. Unlike the Edmund Fitzgerald, when the Daniel J Morrell broke in half in Lake Huron in 30-foot seas and 65 mph winds, there was one survivor: Dennis Hale.

Hale has recently written a book: "Shipwrecked: Reflections of the Sole Survivor," recounting his experience.

Hale is coming to Rhode Island

this weekend and will be the keynote speaker at the annual banquet and awards dinner of the Steamship Historical Society of America, of which he is a long-time member.

The event will be held at the Atlantic Beach Club, Middletown, on Saturday, May 17; 6 to 10 p.m. It is open to the public, and the $75 ticket includes dinner and a cocktail hour opportunity to meet the author. For tickets, call 401/463-3570.

THEATER REVIEW

'Blackbird' shocking, mesmerizing

“Shock” is the first word of dialogue you hear in “Blackbird,” the harrowing drama now being performed at The Gamm Theatre, and it’s apt: this is a play that will shock, disturb and unsettle you. But that’s what great drama is designed to do, to purge the horrific from our souls and shake up our empathy in order to examine hard topics. It is a deceptively simple play, as nothing much happens to the two characters other than a conjuring up of a shared and extremely disturbing past. In “Blackbird” a young woman confronts the man she had a sexual affair with when she was 12.

The experience of watching “Blackbird” is akin to seeing a blinding white-hot light gleaming from the utter darkness and what we witness is no less than a ritual of exorcising the darkest secrets of the soul. No easy task and much of the power of this lies within Playwright David Harrower’s grand command of dramatic language; his words, cutting, poetic, sly and visceral manage to speak eloquently about the unspeakable.

The play takes place, appropriately enough, behind closed doors, in the barren factory break room where Una has, many years after the incident, tracked Ray down. This barren little place with refuse spilling out of a trashcan reflects their own inner wastelands, an empty and ugly space that cannot contain dirty little secrets. As Una and Ray examine the deep wound of the soul that binds their pasts together Harrower’s gouge of life drama depicts the deep damage contained within both the ravaged and the ravager.

As profoundly disturbing as this subject matter is, we in the audience are rapt to bear witness, the effect leaves us both mesmerized and shaken. This is driven by the urgent direction of Tony Estrella that maintains a constant tension throughout, figuratively gripping us by the back of the neck and pulling us into the midst of this tragedy. Though this strident storytelling is entirely truthful it leaves little room for nuance, a quality especially needed in a play where motivations are murky, connections between characters are complex and blurry buried memories are slowly brought into focus. I watched riveted and fascinated, but also felt that I was always witnessing a level of crescendo that needed to be gradually built up to.

The fascinating language structure of David Harrower’s play contains this emotional and stylistic swell however. Initial dialogue is spare, clipped and hints at hidden meaning, akin to the writing of Harold Pinter. The conversations between the two then become more naturalistic before exploding into two soul-searing soliloquies. That’s a lot for two actors to do while both baring and trying to conceal their darkest secrets and each achieve this task with considerable aplomb.

Jim O’Brien plays Ray and O’Brien is one of those actors whose inherent humanity cannot help but radiate from his onstage persona. The fact that such a likable actor plays such a reprehensible person induces an appropriate amount of uncomfortable squirming and adds considerably to the onstage tension. Beneath his thin veneer of seemingly sincere plausible deniability hints of evil impulses always seem to lurk; it is as if he is at all times trying to digest the guilt that churns within him, much to his own disgust.

Madeline Lambert is sharply strident and furiously forthright as Una, there’s a laser-like intensity that shapes her ends onstage. Ms. Lambert makes Una a woman who has pushed her victimization deep down into the recesses of her soul, her vulnerability long ago turned callused and brittle. We understand the hardened and isolated woman she’s become and in her heartfelt soliloquy we fully appreciate the lost little girl she was. Both actors here truly come into their own during their respective soliloquies, revealing at long last what each has spent a lifetime concealing.

Ally Gower is an utterly real and delightful presence playing a young girl, a role about which, for the sake of the story, I can say no more.

Jessica Hill’s highly realistic set design is spot-on, in addition to the break room this factory interior boasts huge metal cylinders, flashing red lights and the hint of a turbine created by Matthew Terry’s lighting effects. This does lead me to one minor quibble however. The wall at the back of the break room includes a door that must be slammed from time to time. When this occurs, that entire wall shakes and quivers. A small enough thing perhaps but it had the effect of taking me out of the carefully constructed world depicted onstage and some solid bracing would have reinforced the onstage realism.

But these minor problems do not diminish the whole of this heart-shaking production that is, from start to finish, an excoriating examination of the everlasting effects, great and small, of an evil action. That this subject matter is not for all audiences is obvious and easily said, what’s trickier is the emotional honesty that playwright Harrower has created for both of his characters. To his great credit Harrower has provided no easy resolution in the conventional dramatic sense. That the abuse that binds Una and Ray together is too horribly prevalent is a tragedy served by silence. “Blackbird” honestly and eloquently examines the horrible damage humans are capable of inflicting upon the innocent, but provides no easy answers because there are no easy answers. Some wounds never heal.

Cat stress leads to mess

Dear Dr. Evans,

For some time now, I've noticed that if I'm getting ready to leave for a vacation or if I have out-of-town company, my cat often starts having accidents. She'll use the box for stool, but she'll urinate in odd places. Once or twice, I've noticed a drop of blood. When things get back to normal, the problem seems to ease up.

Should I be worried? Is there anything I can do to help? — Lori G.

Dear Lori,

I can't diagnose from a distance, but it sounds like your cat may be suffering from feline interstitial cystitis (FIC). Stressful incidents of any kind allow for the build-up of irritating compounds that inflame the bladder. The build-up leads to an angry, painful bladder. Cats feel the need to void frequently, often in inappropriate locations.

You should collect a urine sample (I know, I know, easier said than done — your vet can help) and see your vet to rule out infection (relatively uncommon in the cat), diet-related problems, and so forth. But there are a few things you can do to prevent bouts of FIC and to manage flare-ups.

First, minimize stress. Feline stressors can be much more subtle than visitors, workmen, or vacationing owners. A less-than-pristine litterbox is a major source of emotional discomfort to many cats. Boxes need to be scooped at least once daily, topped off with additional litter to maintain a consistent depth, and changed outright once a week. If you have more than one cat, you need one more box than you have cats. Try to see your home through a cat's eye: Is the litterbox near a furnace or boiler that might suddenly make a loud noise and scare your cat witless? Is a housemate cat bullying your kitty when she's trying to use the box? Is the box easy to access and comfortable to use?

Second, ease stress. Does your cat like to play? Play with her. Does she like being petted? Pet her. Like being brushed? Brush away. Make sure to provide lots of perches and hiding places, especially when you have company. Boredom is stressful, so enhance her environment. Hide food treats around the house so she has to hunt, or you can use food puzzles — gadgets that release treats when she performs a certain task — to occupy her mind. Above all, love her up. Make sure she feels safe and secure.

Third, increase her water consumption. Canned food makes this easy, but you can also add fresh water to her kibble if she likes what she's eating. Get a kitty water fountain and enjoy watching her splash around. Make sure there's always fresh, cold water in her dish. Based on the urinalysis, your vet may recommend a diet change; if so, opt for canned.

Lastly, enlist medical aid. Clean-up is critical whenever accidents happen; your vet can suggest effective products, like the embarrassingly named but awesomely effective Anti-Icky Poo. Sprays and infusers with feline pheromones, the kind that mom cats exude while nursing kittens, encourage calmness, as can certain nutritional supplements.

In short, if your stressed-out kitty is having accidents, think of them as a cry — a meow? — for help and take action. Good luck — Dr. Evans

East Bay foster parents urge Rhode Islanders to join their ranks

A former state orphanage site on the Rhode Island College campus was the setting on Monday, May 5, for a gathering of former foster children and others dedicated to finding loving homes for children in need, particularly older children.

"Because two Rhode Islanders cared enough to open their home and heart to me, I was given a chance and I took it," said Michelle Saunders of Rumford, who has a master's degree in adult education from the University of Rhode Island and a bachelor of science in marketing from Johnson & Wales University. "Give a child in need a chance. That's all he or she is asking for. Please consider becoming a foster parent."

Family Service of Rhode Island convened the press conference as part of the observance of Foster Care Month in Rhode Island. "Today, our focus is particularly on the need for Rhode Islanders to open their hearts and homes to older foster children," said Sarah Kelly-Palmer, LICSW, senior clinical administrator at Family Service of Rhode Island.

Lynne Bates, of Tiverton, served as a foster mom to an older foster child, later adopting her. "I ask Rhode Islanders to remember the older foster child. He or she needs what has been termed a 'forever family' because parenting doesn't stop at age 18." Her adopted daughter, Lana, thanked her adoptive mother for welcoming her into her home.

"They saw me through my high school years and adopted me when I turned 18," said Lana, who was welcomed into the Bates home as a foster child when she was 12. She called her adoptive mother "a true community hero." Lana works in the medical field and is pursuing a business degree at the Community College of Rhode Island.

Family Service of Rhode Island and other foster care agencies across the state have a waiting list of children needing foster homes. Foster parents can be married, single, straight, gay and lesbian. More information about foster parenting is available at www.familyserviceri.org; 401/331-1350 x3305.

Family Service of Rhode Island is holding an open house on Thursday, May 15 at 134 Thurbers Avenue in Providence starting at 5 p.m. for anyone thinking about becoming a foster parent.

It Was Overwhelming — 'Making Memories' at Bay View

On a recent Sunday afternoon two friends joined my wife and me as we attended the musical revue "Making Memories," this year's entry in the thirty-first "Manhattan at the Bay" production at Bay View Academy. It was overwhelming!

The girls of Bay View, under the superb direction of Christine Kavanagh, performed a brilliant non-stop production of a cabaret revue, so wide and packed with performers that, at times, it seemed we were watching and hearing a twelve-ring circus!

The ensembles were exciting and the soloists — to every single young woman — brilliant.

Most entertainments which take a cabaret or musical revue format suffer from the "black-outs" or action pauses required to go from one musical show to another. Not so here. These numbers were so arranged that one number led seamlessly into the next. The audience could hardly catch its breath between numbers, and one wonders how the performers could "change gears" (let alone costumes) so quickly.

The reason my party had gone to the cabaret in the first place was to watch one of the young singers in our church choir perform. Ophelia Fernandes — always excellent in our Sunday choir — was breathtaking on the cabaret stage, focusing on the action when her share of the audience's attention was meant to be small and taking over the whole stage when she had been given a leading role in a song.

We never had a moment to be disappointed in her performance! To top off the evening, Karen Mellor (of Avenue A), was the percussion section in the excellent orchestra directed by Diane Gualtieri. I first knew Karen as a show drummer when she was 16.

Next year when you note Bay View Academy is performing "Manhattan at the Bay," be certain to plan to go (and buy your ticket early!). You won't be disappointed.

■ Governor Lincoln Chafee proposed a state contract for the largest state employee union that provides three back-to-back pay raises over the next 18 months of 2 percent each. After the union members approved it, House Speaker Nicholas Mattiello noted that it was disappointing that the Chafee administration made this commitment without identifying a way to pay for it. Superior Court judge wannabe Richard Licht negotiated the "deal." Let's reward him with a lifetime job for this sell-out.

■ Senate President Teresa Paiva Weed went on an all-expense paid trip to Madrid, Spain, funded by GTECH along with a dozen companies and trade associations who are frequent lobbyists at the State House. The 5-day trip had little business during the "conference." Perhaps Ms. Paiva Weed attended one of the famed bullfights since she has returned and is throwing the bull herself about not eliminating the master lever and bullet-proofing herself and her minions from ethics oversight.

Two new releases, both excellent reads

Under Magnolia: A Southern Memoir By Frances Mayes

The well-known author of "Under the Tuscan Sun" and "Every Day in Tuscany," Frances Mayes has, in her recent book "Under Magnolia," turned her thoughts to her birthplace of Fitzgerald, Georgia where she was raised by a hard-drinking and unpredictable father, Grabert, together with a disillusioned and bitter mother, Frankye.

Probably the greatest strength of this book is Mayes' ability to create an acute and palpable feeling of place through her direct appeal to the senses. For example, reminiscences of her home town are stirred by the "narcotizing fragrance of the land — jasmine, ginger lilies, wisteria, gardenia blending with honeysuckle, the scent entangled with the euphonious chorus of tree frogs and the mouthy baritone of swamp frogs croaking contrapunto... Only here can I step outside and, by merely inhaling, say, 'Lawd o' mercy.'" Through her acutely vivid descriptions, the reader can visualize the blossoming magnolia, the towering oaks, pecan, and sycamore trees, the crepe-myrtle, "the hedges of arching bridal wreath all creating a sun-spangled leaf canopy shading the white wrap-around porch."

A true child of the South, she compares those elements of Georgia and North Carolina, where she also spent time, with those that first attracted her to Tuscany; among them, the warmth of the Italian people resembled the "y'all come hospitality" of her native Southerners. In addition, there was their mutual emphasis on ancestors and the past, interconnection of family and friends, incessant talking, storytelling and sense of fatalism.

Her story, however, is not all beauty and roses. Hers was a difficult childhood. Both parents were restless, bored, and unhappy. There were constant shouting matches, jealous rages, and recriminations; both drank to excess; her father often threatened with a loaded gun, and Frances became the scapegoat of their anger and frustration. The only calm, steady, and level-headed presence in her life was her beloved black nanny Willie Bell. While Frances' mother ignored her, Willie Bell consoled and encouraged her. "Don't mind them none," she would say, "they's crazy." It was Willie Bell, who tapping the child's shoulder blades, would say, "You got wings back here; you gon' fly, little girl." Frances would sometimes follow the nanny to the tar-papered shack, where she lived in the black section on the edge of town, to escape the chaos at home.

There is a lot to glean from this book. First of all, it is a character study of an extremely dysfunctional family and their complex relationships to each other. Moreover, it provides a very personal and first-hand depiction of the South — its rampant racism; its relentless, oppressive, and suffocating heat that causes both dogs and humans to go mad; the emphasis on tradition, family ancestry, courtesy and manners; remnants and reminders of the Civil War; men in white linen suits sipping mint juleps and escorting their daughters to coming-out balls; signs with "Repent" nailed to trees; black rag dolls that become white when you turn them upside down.

Ms. Mayes' goal throughout her entire childhood and young adulthood was to escape what her mother lamented was "The end of the earth," and Frances did achieve that. Read this totally absorbing book to learn how she accomplished this and went on to become a successful author.

The Invention of Wings By Sue Monk Kidd

Sarah and Angelina Grimke, sisters from Charleston, South Carolina, were two of the first female abolitionists and earliest American feminist thinkers. Given that they were born into the power and wealth of an aristocratic family of slave-owners, such independent and liberal leanings were most unusual for women of their time. Active and vociferous activists in the anti-slavery movement of the 1800's, the Grimke sisters penned influential pamphlets and crusaded for both emancipation of slaves and women's rights.

It is surprising that they are relatively unknown today since both were on the public stage before Lucretia Mott, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and Harriet Beecher Stowe, author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Sue Monk Kidd, author of the best-selling novel "The Secret Life of Bees," has made Sarah and Angelina the subjects of this, her most recent book, "The Invention of Wings." In a blending of history and fiction, Kidd has created an extremely interesting tale which captivates and holds the reader throughout the book.

Probably the earliest incident that foreshadows Sarah's behavior and sentiments throughout the story is her attempted refusal to accept the slave maid Handful as a gift from her father on her 11th birthday. Despite her protestations, Handful becomes her own personal serving maid, and eventually they become confidants as well as friends. Although Sarah cannot shield Handful from the punishments doled out to slaves, she secretly teaches her to read which was illegal and subject to severe penalties at that time. Their relationship is ambivalent, however. Handful is willful and resentful of her position and sometimes takes advantage of her mistress' leniency. This causes turmoil in the Grimke family, who strongly believe that by law a slave is equivalent to 3/5 of a person and to encourage them or to educate them is treading on dangerous ground.

In addition, Sarah commits the error of asserting her ambition to become a jurist some day like her father and brothers which appalls and shocks everyone. Since she is beginning to harbor intellectual pursuits inappropriate to a female, Sarah is not only banned from using her father's library but also relegated to the more womanly activities of needlepoint and the like. Books and learning are Sarah's most precious and valued activities, and without them she falls into a deep depression.

Read this wonderful account of the metamorphosis of this timid, stutter-prone young girl into one of the leading voices denouncing the evil of slavery. Sarah's closeness to Handful and dismay at what she witnesses the Negroes are made to endure is the impetus in Sarah's decision to do all in her power to effect their freedom. In this effort, she is joined by her younger sister Angelina. Kidd creates a fast-moving plot of slave rebellions and uprisings, dangerous attempts by runaways and insurgents to gain freedom, cruel and sadistic punishments when they are caught, and always the righteous wisdom and compassion of the main protagonist Sarah whose humanity cannot allow her to silently observe and do nothing. In my opinion, "The Invention of Wings" is superior in many respects to "The Secret Life of Bees," which was highly acclaimed and very popular.

Grain & Grain: an introductory course in the arts of bread making and wood carving “Grain & Grain” is a hands-on, two-day workshop focusing on artisan bread making and wood-spoon carving. Participants will be introduced to the world of baking artisan breads, and in the process make a variety of breads to take home each day. As the bread rises or bakes, students then will delve into learning how to hand carve a one-of-a-kind wooden spoon made from Blithewold hardwood that they can take home. Both are very tactile processes, which can be extremely empowering as students learn to work with their hands and produce something of value.

The course is taught by Ashley Look, a Certified Natural Chef from the Nutrition Therapy Institute in Denver, Colorado.

Martin's Garden Notes Container Gardening

Container gardening is a way to enjoy the pleasures of gardening when you do not have the space or inclination to garden in your yard. It allows you to have flowers, herbs and vegetables up close to where you enjoy the outdoors. Here are a few tips.

Choose good sized containers. The increased volume of larger pots provides extra room for the plant's roots. Choose a soil mix that is well drained but high in moisture holding ingredients like peat moss. Porous containers such as terra-cotta, wood, and moss lined baskets allow the containers to breathe, thereby keeping roots cooler and providing oxygen for the roots. Make sure your containers have drainage holes.

A ready source of moisture and nutrients is critical to produce good growth. Two products that help greatly are Osmocote, a slow release fertilizer, and Soil Moist, a material that increases the water holding capacity of your containers. Mix these materials in your soil mix for superior performance.

When choosing plants, combine contrasting colors for an eye-catching display, or use related colors for a more subtle effect. Many vegetables like lettuces, parsley, or even cabbages make attractive container plants to add to your flowers.

MEET ELIZABETH KIRK: PUBLICIST, SKIER, BOATER, SCHOOL VOLUNTEER

BY JOAN D. WARREN

Elizabeth Kirk relocated to Rhode Island with her husband, Chris, and children, Tyler and Lily, after living in New York City, Los Angeles and Maine. Elizabeth fully understands the complexities of relocating, especially with small children. She looks forward to helping her clients with all aspects of the moving process, whether it be across the country or just a few blocks away. Elizabeth is also an extremely active community volunteer and enjoys boating in the summer and skiing in the winter.

WHY REAL ESTATE AS A CAREER?

"I love working with people and I love the satisfaction that comes with seeing someone's face when they know they have found their home. But sometimes the process is not an easy one. I believe to be a great agent, you really have to go the extra mile, focus on the different needs of every client and take the extra steps necessary to cover every angle of a transaction, whether buying or selling. Real estate is about so much more than just looking at houses — although that really is a fun part of it!"

WHAT DID YOU DO BEFORE REAL ESTATE?

"For over 15 years I was a senior film publicist for DreamWorks, Universal and Miramax and lived in both Los Angeles and New York City. I booked publicity tours for many major celebrities, coordinated TV and print interviews and planned major press events and premiers. You had to always think of every angle and be incredibly detail oriented. I loved it, and so much of this skill set just naturally segued into real estate. I couldn't be happier with real estate as my second career."

WHAT DO YOU LIKE MOST ABOUT IT?

"I love making people happy and the incredible satisfaction when we find the perfect house for them or a great buyer for a house I am selling. Buying or selling a home is about so much more than just the transaction. For most people it is one of the most important decisions they will make for their family. Being there to support them and help them through it is so gratifying. There is so much that is involved in the home buying and selling process these days and making people feel comfortable, and protected every step of the way is not only important but integral."

BEST FAMILY DAY:

"We love living in Rhode Island on the water, and we have spent so many great days on our boat in the summers. Heading over to Potter's Cove with friends and a picnic lunch is just about as perfect as you can get for us here."

WHAT ARE SOME OF YOUR HOBBIES?

"I love playing tennis, skiing, volunteering and spending time with my family on the water whenever I can."

WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE PLACE IN THE EAST BAY TO HAVE LUNCH?

"The Beehive! I love sitting on the deck with friends and eating the roasted butternut squash sandwich!"

Elizabeth Kirk

"I just laughed out loud! My husband and kids will say I don't know how to, but if you put me on a beautiful beach with a good book I can really try ..."

ADVICE TO FIRST TIME BUYERS:

"I think getting to know the market is so important, and helping first-time homebuyers understand all facets of a home purchase is something I love doing. Going to open houses, understanding comps in different neighborhood locations and having comfortable financing in place are all integral. With all of that information, when the right house comes along, a first-time homebuyer can feel confident making an offer."

MARKET PREDICTIONS:

"The spring market has been very active. I believe, because of our great schools and location on the water, Barrington and many other Rhode Island towns will continue to be a very desirable place to live, and housing prices will continue to stabilize and remain a solid investment for buyers."

House of the Week

Enjoy a backyard view of the bay

This waterfront home in Bristol exudes subtle elegance and exceptional water views. Built in 1958 with meticulous craftsmanship, this 2,496-square-foot home has it all. It features four bedrooms and two full bathrooms, and a second kitchen and bedroom on the garden level can be used as an in-law suite.

There is almost a California-style feel to the home, with cathedral ceilings and open flow.

The living room boasts a wood-burning fireplace, hidden television, water views and the bonus of French doors out to an ample deck. It is an exceptional entertaining environment year-round. The kitchen is outfitted with Miele appliances.

Welcome the sunrise from the spacious main-level master bedroom with screened French doors that open to a very accommodating 70-foot-long deck.

There are six pairs of screened French doors — three on the main level out to the deck (two in the master bedroom, which have incredible views) and three on the garden level.

A second, garden-level kitchen is next to an invitingly warm dining room with a fireplace and original built-in indoor grill.

From the garden patio it's an easy trip to the shore down stone steps that open to a private beach. Swimming is pleasurable with no undertow and an easy launch for all types of watercraft. Back at the house, a hot outdoor shower awaits after a dip in the ocean.

The bonus of this property is that no flood insurance is required. Although the lot is spacious at nearly half an acre, there is minimal yard maintenance. Summer deciduous trees and ocean breezes keep it comfortable, although the home is equipped with central air conditioning. Smoke alarms are hard-wired on 200-amp. electricity.

The east-facing home retains heat well in the winter from abundant sunlight sources, which provide passive solar.

Additionally, Viking Drive is in the heart of a true neighborhood, with a park and community pier which host traditional seasonal gatherings. Enjoy the use of the community dock so friends with boats can visit and tie up a few doors down.

As a second home, to accommodate an aging parent in an in-law situation, or to simply relish year-round in the comfort and incredible beauty that waterfront living provide, this home has it all.

Loan rates based on $100,000 with 20% down payment & no PMI. Variable mortgages listed are for 30 years, adjusted annually. Points are a one-time charge equal to one percent of the mortgage. APR stands for annual percentage rate and reflects closing costs spread over the life of the loan. CAP is the most a variable mortgage can increase in one year. Savings and loans and Rhode Island loan and investment banks are included in the bank section of this chart. These rates, provided by the institutions on Monday of this week, are subject to change or special conditions. For more information, consumers are advised to call the institution. First-time homebuyers may qualify for lower-rate mortgages from the Rhode Island Housing and Mortgage Finance Corporation. Many credit unions only grant loans to members and limit membership to a defined group. When shopping for mortgage rates ask for explanation of closing costs. Financial institutions that write residential mortgages that wish to be included on this list can get in touch with Classified Real Estate Advertising Specialist at 401-253-1000
