Queen's greetings

Jessica O'Donnell with Lady Liberty, the Fell pony whose image will appear on Queen Elizabeth's holiday card.

Tiverton pony stars on Queen Elizabeth's card

BY BRUCE BURDETT

Tiverton pony named Lady Liberty will help Queen Elizabeth share Christmas greetings with family and friends this holiday season. The Queen's card will feature a photo of Liberty frolicking in the snow one day last winter in her Brayton Road, Tiverton, paddock. Jessica O'Donnell took that photo of her pony and last week found an unusual letter in her mail.

"On the envelope were the words 'Royal Mail.' I thought, 'That's strange.' I couldn't imagine what that was all about." Inside was a royal-stamped note from the Queen - the Queen's secretary actually - thanking Ms. O'Donnell for letting the Queen use her photograph. That picture, the note added, will appear on the British votes await voters Special November town meeting warrant taking shape

Pay for police officers and a new backhoe are among the big ticket items for the Nov. 5 Special Town Meeting warrant that is now being drawn up.

Selectmen unanimously approved the first ten warrant articles last week, pending legal review, with several other articles still awaiting votes.

Topping the list is a $451,510 appropriation (Article 1) to provide a four-year retroactive pay hike plus $64,000 to cover fiscal year 2015 for police officers. That figure is the result of arbitration between the town and police union and stems from the fact that town police have been without a new contract since 2009.

Money to cover the raises would come from the town stabilization fund for which two-thirds town meeting approval is required.

Since the raise was reached through arbitration, Finance Committee member Hugh Morton urged selectmen to include the warrant since to put the matter off could prove even more costly for Westport.

Backhoe for transfer station

Article 2 seeks $125,000 for a new backhoe for the Board of Health for use at the town's transfer station and recycling center.

James Walsh of the BOH said they now have a large front-end loader but rely on the Highway Department when a backhoe is needed.

"We have a big John Deere loader that works well but dates back to when we ran a landfill," Mr. Walsh said.

Owners say they'll close coal-fired Brayton Pt. Power Station

BY BRUCE BURDETT bburdett@eastbaynewspapers.com

Brayton Point Power Station in Somerset, the constant target of protesters who decried it as the region's worst air polluter, will shut down as of May, 2017.

That announcement came Monday from Curt Morgan, president and CEO of Brayton Point Energy LLC, the company that recently purchased the coal-fired facility. The firm purchased the power plant several months ago from Dominion to Energy Capital Partners with the stated intent of eventually converting it to natural gas.

In their statement, the power station's owners cited low electricity prices, abundant natural gas, and looming costs "to meet environmental regulations and to operate and maintain an aging plant." The firm said it will continue to supply power to the grid until its closing.

Brayton Point employs just under 250 people in Somerset and surrounding towns.

"We understand the impacts that this decision ... will have on the employees of Brayton Point, the local community and other stakeholders," Mr. Morgan said, adding that they will do their best to ease the transition.

"I'll believe it when I see it," said Ray Gallison Rep. (Portsmouth/Bristol) of the announcement.

He said the 2017 date leaves "too much time for something else to happen ... a lesson learned in the LNG fight." Brayton Point's electric rate permit could be re-set in May, 2016 "and a lot can happen between now and then." He said that the town of Somerset likely won't take the loss of jobs and a $16 million payment in lieu of taxes lying down. And the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission might step in if it felt adequate power supply to be at risk.

"It's great news but I'll believe it when I see the lights turned off and the lights turned off. Given what they have spent, I can't see them just walking away."

Walter Senator Felag (Warren/Tiverton/Bristol) said, "This is truly a victory for the local environmental area, both in the air quality and the Mt Hope Bay ecosystem. Coal-fired power facilities are obsolete and need to be replaced."

Said Westport state Rep. Paul Schmid, "Coal is dirty, no doubt. But there are risks in becoming dependent on gas. And I think of the jobs and tax revenues lost to Somerset."

No sooner had the announcement been made than press releases began flying from environmental groups that have staged numerous protests there, the most memorable of which involved anchoring a fishing boat in the path of an incoming coal ship. Groups had been predicting such an outcome as the power plant posted dire earnings predictions — $3 million in losses were forecast for next year.

"Brayton Point is the largest and most modern coal-fired power plant in New England. If they can't make a go of it, none of them can ... This is a death knell for coal in the region," said Jonathan Peress, vice president of the Clean Energy and Climate Program for the Conservation Law Foundation. "It's a very clear indication that coalfired power is no longer economically viable."

"Now the hard work begins in transitioning this former coal community towards a 21st century innovation economy. We will continue to work alongside community members for resources to move Somerset into a healthy and thriving future," said Clean Water Action Massachusetts.

"Families in Massachusetts and Rhode Island will breathe easier when this plant is no longer belching harmful pollution into the air. It's critical that ECP and our state's leaders work to ensure a responsible transition plan that cares for the community and workers that will be affected when the plant retires," said James McCaffrey of the Sierra Club of New England.

The shutdown announcement comes not long after Dominion spent over $1 billion to upgrade the plant. Two mammoth cooling towers, the tallest structures around and visible from Massachusetts and East Bay towns, were built to reduce water discharge temperatures into Mount Hope Bay that were blamed for killing off fish and other creatures. Air 'scrubbing' equipment was added to reduce pollution levels that the Environmental Protection Agency called the worst in New England. And some oil and natural gas were added to the fuel mix.

According to published reports, coal accounts for about 3 percent of electricity produced in the region compared to 52 percent for natural gas. Nationwide, however, coal provided almost 45 percent of power produced in 2010, according to the U.S. Energy Information Administration.

Pony to grace Queen's card

Queen's Christmas card. "I was shocked," Ms. O'Donnell said. "I couldn't believe what I was reading."

Except that also in the envelope were examples of the card itself. "So it's real — and it's beautiful."

When she had had a moment to let the news sink in, it started to make sense. Months ago she had received an inquiry from the president of the Fell Pony Society in England asking whether it might be possible to use her picture in some way.

"I replied, 'Sure. No problem."

And Ms. O'Donnell said she also knew that Queen Elizabeth is a passionate admirer and defender of the rare Fell Pony, a working moorland breed native to northern England. The 87-year-old Queen owns over half a dozen of them and still rides them on occasion.

"What really excited me was that this breed is so loved in England and she chose a US-bred pony for her card,"Ms. O'Donnell said. "And even more cool, this one is named 'Lady Liberty."

Ms. O'Donnell said she tries to keep a camera with her at all times and it paid off that day last winer.

"It was one of those beautiful mornings after a snowfall, about 10 inches of snow that was sticking to the trees ... Liberty was out cantering around, frolicking in the snow having a great time — they love the snow," she said. "I just got lucky."

The daughter of John and Ethel Viveiros, Jessica grew up at the family's Brayton Road home surrounded by animals and came to love horses early on.

"I was home-schooled so that provided me with more flexibility to spend time learning about horses and their training." That led to work with dressage and to competitions and, eventually, to a career as a horse trainer.

She's married now (husband Matthew) and living on Stone Church Road in Tiverton but does her training work at her parents' Brayton Road property where there is horse barn and training facilities.

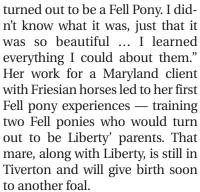

Ms. O'Donnell said she has long admired the Friesian horse and has trained some of them.

"One day I saw a picture of what

These aren't the pint-sized ponies most people envision, Ms. O'Donnell said, but solid, bigboned animals sturdy and balanced animals able to carry riders, pull carts and do work.

"And they are beautiful. Liberty is black, many are but others are bay or gray, they have these great thick tails, flowing fairy-tale manes and feathered feet."

And "they can do anything" from traditional work on farms to dressage, jumping and other show events. "They are great companions, very friendly."

MEETING: Town meeting warrant takes shape

At what is now the transfer station/recycling center, there is continual need to level and compact loads in containers, work that a backhoe can handle but not the loader.

"We also have lots of maintenance tasks to do like fixing retaining walls, snow removal ... and we are constantly calling on the Highway Department. We really need one of our own."

Foreman Chris Goncalves said the new machine would free up the Highway Department for other tasks. "We have been happy to help out but we only have one backhoe and need it most of the time for our own work." The department is also short-staffed and must send along a driver each time it shares its backhoe — "which is pretty often."

Mr. Walsh said that all employees at the transfer station are licensed to operate a backhoe.

A similar request was on the warrant at the last town meeting but was dropped during the meeting when the budget committee encountered calculation problems with total warrant expenditures.

■ Article 3 asks voters to send $16,707 in Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) storm cost reimbursement money to Fall River. The payment would reimburse Fall River for the cost of pumping done at South Watuppa Pond to help ease flooding in Westport neighborhoods caused by the big rains of March 2010. Fall River requested the payment as part of talks concerning the cost of Fall River water to some north Westport residences.

■ Article 4 seeks $19,400 to cover extra fiscal year 2014 tuition expenses for sending Westport students to Diman Regional Vocational Technical High School. Towns using the high school are being asked to pitch in more to offset state funding cuts. Some towns that send more students are being asked for another $100,000plus.

■ Article 5 would create a revolving fund of no more than $10,000 to support town animal control work. The funds would pay for boarding and care for animals sent by Westport to Forever Paws and other regional shelters.

■ Article 6 would provide approval of items – $15,000 to the town account for Mr. Spirlet opposed.

the care of cemetery lots and graves. This would be a fund transfer not requiring additional expenditure.

Articles 7 and 8 continue and clarify a Recreation Committee action at last spring's town meeting when voters agreed to increase that committee from five members to seven. Article 7 will stipulate that Recreation Committee members are to be appointed rather than elected; Article 7 will be a repeat vote of the decision to boost committee membership from five to seven.

Articles 9 and 10 would allow the Personnel Board to make pay grade decisions concerning the jobs of animal control officer and assistant animal control officer.

Articles 9 and 10 are housekeeping measures concerning the positions of Animal Control Officer and Assistant Animal Control Officer. Last spring, animal control functions were moved from Board of Health to Police Department oversight.

Term limits

Also approved by 3-2 vote was an amended measure proposed by board Chairman Antone Vieira to limit Finance Committee members to three terms or nine years.

Selectmen Michael Sullivan said such a change might cost the town experienced board and committee members. He later offered an amendment that would exempt elected officials from the term limit and extend the limit on appointed officials to four terms or 12 years.

That wasn't good enough for Steven Ouellette or Craig Dutra, both of whom voted against the plan. Mr. Ouellette argued that voters are capable of deciding for themselves whether a board member deserves reelection and noted that the Selectmen majority had recently appointed a member with 19 years experience to the Conservation Commission.

The measure passed 3-2; later Mr. Ouellette asked that the printed warrant reflect the Selectmen's votes on each item for the sake of transparency.

Board member Richard Spirlet disagreed, saying that such a move strays from past practice.

An amendment by Mr. Sullivan — for the warrant to reflect either 'majority' or 'unanimous' approval of items — passed 4-1, Mr. Spirlet opposed.

Visitors enjoy a previous Westport Town Farm Harvest Festival at the farm overlooking the Westport River.

Town Farm set to celebrate the harvest

The Trustees of Reservations will host its fifth annual Harvest Festival on Saturday, Oct. 19, from noon to 4 p.m. All are welcome to join the celebration, with local food, music, family activities and a special one-day farmers market featuring Westport-area farmers.

This is the last chance to purchase fresh vegetables from local farmers at a farmers market this season. Admission is $3 for adults.

Farmers and vendors expected to attend include Skinny Dip Farm, Runaway Farm, Paradise Hill Farm, Apponagansett Farm, Brix Bounty Farm, The Hidden Garden, Hana's Honey, Noquochoke Orchards, Quonset Farm, Smoke and Pickles, and others.

Antique farm implements will be on display, along with demonstrations on old barn construction and apple cider pressing. Youngsters will have the opportunity to paint pumpkins, join a scavenger hunt, and interact with goats, cows, alpacas and other animals from nearby farms. Guests are also encouraged to stroll the scenic grounds and gardens, and enjoy one of Westport's most beautiful places.

This year's music will be provided by the popular group "Bagmen." Barry Gross, joined by father and son duo Dock and Putnam Murdock, are South Dartmouth-based musicians who delve into many styles of music. They are three fourths of the local Bluegrass quartet Bag Men, and frequently share the stage as part of Putnam Murdock's self-titled band, playing his original melding of folk, rock, and bluegrass music. Dock and Putnam also form part of the longstanding Bluegrass group the Centre Streeters. Putnam has won acclaim for his songwriting, including having his album Fiction placed on the official ballot for the Grammy Awards in five categories.

Food from Smoke and Pickles of Westport will be on sale throughout the afternoon.

This year The Trustees again provided thousands of pounds of fresh produce to the Westport Council on Aging and its weekly Food For Friends program. With the leadership of Steve Connors, The Trustees' farm manager, and the help of volunteers and the South Coast Youth Conservation Program, The Trustees expanded its agricultural program at the Westport Town Farm and Cornell Farm in Dartmouth.

Each season, the Trustees of Reservations hires area teens for their environmental work program, and this year a crew of eight young people was assigned to this South Coast effort.

The Westport Town Farm, known for generations as the "Poor Farm," is now the home for offices of the Westport Land Conservation Trust, and the Trustees of Reservations Southeast Region. The property is open to the public from dawn to dusk for hiking, bird-watching and other passive recreation.

Town Farm is located at 830 Drift Road, Westport. For more information, call 508-636-4693, ext. 13. Or email sconnors@ttor.org.

WHEN MINDS CLOSE

When minds close, democracy begins to close. Fear creeps in... Rhetoric masquerades as thought. Dogma is dressed up like an idea. Then the lie begins to carry more power that the truth and the images of television replace history. An open democracy inspires wisdom and the dignity of choice. A closed society inspires terror and the tyranny of belief. We are no longer citizens. We are media engineered clones.

Region will be well rid of coal plant

f it actually comes to pass, news that coal-fired Brayton Point Power Station will shut down arrives as a breath of fresh October air to the towns within range of its stacks.

The plant, described by the EPA as the most toxic polluter of air in New England, has been a blight on the region for decades and the South Coast will be well rid of it.

That 'worst polluter' status stuck to the power plant despite belated efforts by owners to scrub the emissions. Nobody here was spared the yellow pall that hung over Somerset on still mornings. When breezes rose from the north, that cloud — bearing mercury, arsenic, lead, ammonia and more, wafted south to Tiverton, Portsmouth, Westport and Little Compton. Easterly breezes sent it to Warren, Bristol and Barrington. And southwesterly sea breezes were fouled for those living north and east.

Although the scrubbers helped some, people used to swear that they could tell the wind direction by the depth of the soot layer on their cars in the morning.

The plant's warm water discharge transformed much of Mount Hope Bay into a bathtub dead zone. Fishermen say conditions have improved some since construction of billion dollar cooling towers but still are not close to what once was. No word yet on the fate of those towering twin nuclear eyesores.

As was the case with an ill-conceived attempt to transform Mount Hope Bay into a private LNG terminal, public outcry clearly played a part in the owners' decision to throw in the towel. No image in the fight has been more lasting than that of a small Newport fishing boat anchored smack in the path of an incoming coal ship despite the Coast Guard's best efforts to evict it.

While the closure is certainly hard on the 250 people who work there, less bothersome are claims that regional electric bills will soar without Brayton Point's coal power. With natural gas abundant and relatively inexpensive, coal now contributes only about 3 percent to the New England power mix — indeed competitive pricing was perhaps the biggest reason for Monday's announcement.

Brayton Point is a relic of an era when people didn't (or pretended not to) know better than to pump sulfur and soot into the sky.

It is way past time for Southeastern New England to move on.

Disgusted by smokers who litter our beach

To the editor:

I read a letter last week from Mike Martel about rights being taken away, etc. with the question of removing smoking rights on the beach. I would like to comment on beach butts as well. I am lucky enough to be a regular on South Shore and Goosewing beaches all summer. I am so disgusted when people leave their trash without another glance. I am especially turned off by people who smoke all day, leaving all their butts on the sand.

Please tell me why they think this is okay to do to our beautiful shoreline? This is plain ignorant. Please be more thoughtful of the beach and leave with all your trash and butts. Thank you!

Stop Chained CPI attack on retirees' income

To the editor:

A flawed policy initiative called the Chained CPI is gaining steam in Washington budget talks that would shortchange everyone who receives federal benefits such as Social Security and federal annuities by low balling their annual cost-of-living adjustments (COLAs).

Chained CPI supporters have tried to minimize the consequences it will have on seniors, retired federal employees, and veterans by calling it a "technical adjustment" or "better measure of inflation."

When you cut through the rhetoric, the truth is that the Chained CPI is only an adjustment in that it means smaller COLAs each year. It hurts every American — particularly our most vulnerable — in a major way that worsens over time.

How would the switch to the Chained CPI hurt an American citizen who receives the average $15,000 annual Social Security benefit? Over 25 years, Chained CPI would rob the senior of more than $23,000. Just think of how many coupons that senior would have to clip to make up for the loss of $23,000 over his/her retired years.

For many federal annuitants who don't receive Social Security, the impact is even greater. Over 25 years, the average federal retiree would see a loss of $48,000.

I urge our lawmakers to reject the Chained CPI and provide America's seniors, retired veterans and public servants, and individuals with disabilities the income protection they have earned and deserve.

Democrats demand their way, never mind the 'little guy'

To the editor:

Not too long ago, a Republican representative shouted, "You lie." The Democrats and compliant media were in high dudgeon, superciliously denouncing the loss of civility in governance.

Now, we witness these same Democrats comparing the Republicans to terrorists. Legislative maneuvers are likened to hostage taking. And the media? Crickets. No outrage here. In fact, the most outrageous Democrat declarations are not even reported.

Helger opens South Coast Power Equipment

A Tiverton man recently merged his two businesses, bought out three Ace Hardware stores worth of rental equipment and opened up shop in Westport.

The result - South Coast Power Equipment, owned and operated by Richard Helger and located at 593B American Legion Highway (Route 177) in Westport.

The new business combines know-how and equipment gathered through years spent operating Rich's Lawn and Garden and Helger's Excavating and Utilities.

"I had wanted to get into the equipment sales and rental business and the opportunity presented itself with this location," Mr. Helger said. "So far so good. Every day is better than the last." The building was previously home to Westport Power Equipment but Mr. Helger stresses that, while the names are similar. believes customers will he receive an entirely 'new and improved' experience at the new shop.

"We are determined to take good care of our customers and I think that approach is making a big difference."

As the name suggests, South Coast Power Equipment deals with "all power equipment needed for maintaining your property," Mr. Helger said. Lines include lawnmowers (home and commercial), weed whackers, blowers, chain saws and much more. Brands include Bad Boy Mowers, Ferris Mowers, Snapper, Simplicity, Echo, Shindaiwa, and Billy Goat, among others.

There is a big rental equipment department, bolstered by stock bought out from the Ace next door and two others. Popular at this time of year are thatchers, aerators, slice seeders, wood splitters, power washers — "there are hundreds of pieces of equipment."

And they'll service anything to do with the outdoor home maintenance, from sharpening and tuning chain saws and lawnmowers to repairing bigger machines.

Mr. Helger said he has plans to enlarge his offerings. This winter he hopes to add snowplows and sanders; next spring perhaps trailers.

Being located next to an Ace Hardware works well for both, he believes. "We feed off each other. We are different enough that it's a good situation."

pantry appreciates donations. The top 10 things they need are canned fruits and veggies, pasta and pasta sauce, hearty soups, snacks, canned tuna or chicken, rice and cereal. Dropoff locations are at the Westport COA, Lees and Westport Library or call the COA at 508/636-1026.

Transportation is offered from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Mondays to Fridays. It is for Westport elders and handicapped persons of all ages by appointment only. It is for medical appointments, local grocery stores and shopping centers, pharmacies and hairdresser appointments in Westport, Dartmouth, New Bedford and Fall River. The cost is $3 one way and $5 round-trip. When you call, have the exact business or doctor's name, street address, telephone number and duration of your appointment (pickup time). Plan at least two weeks in advance due to limited availability.

If you are 60 years of age or over and interested in having lunch at the center, it is served from 11:30 a.m. to noon Monday to Friday. Reserve a meal with the kitchen 48 hours in advance by calling 508/636-1026. There is a donation.

Are you or anyone you know in need of assistance? Call the Outreach office and ask for Andrea or Phyllis for services available to Westport residents 60 years of age and older. Outreach provides home visits, help with applications, information and referrals, food stamps, caregiver support, vision impaired support and medical equipment loaned out.

The SHINE Program (Serving the Health Information Needs of Elders) provides confidential counseling on all aspects of Medicare, supplements and MassHealth. Ken Costa, the SHINE representative, is at the Westport COA on the second and fourth Mondays of the month to answer your insurance questions. Call to schedule an appointment.

The supportive day program provides a safe, structured environment for seniors who are isolated, experience memory or personal loss, recovering from personal illness or injury, or have certain physical restrictions because of agerelated disabilities. The community care program allows elders to remain in their homes, providing much needed respite for caregivers. The program includes trained professional staff, therapeutic games, daily structured and supervised activities, day trips, morning/afternoon snacks, health clinics, nutritious lunch, singalongs, educational programs, gentle exercise, current events and creative activities. Transportation and financial aid are available.

The regular schedule of events and the lunch menu at the senior center is in the Council on Aging newsletter, "Evergreen." Copies can be picked up at local businesses and town buildings or visit the town website at www.westportma.com (choose Council on Aging under "Departments"). It is also available by e-mail (send a request to coaclerk@westport-ma.gov and include your full name and telephone number).

'Loon Man' coming to Westport

John Rockwood, author, professional photographer and naturalist, also known as "The Loon Man" will be the speaker when the Paskamansett Bird Club visits Westport on Thursday, Oct. 10.

The talk and the club's monthly meeting will start at 6:30 p.m. in the Westport Public Library, 408 Old County Road.

Mr. Rockwood will provide a multi-media show centered on his experiences with these birds, especially Grapenut, a loon chick who adopted him into his loon family and shared his first two seasons with him.

Learning to fly, catching prey, playing hide and go seek and riding on his parents' backs are just some of the loon behaviors young Grapenut displayed to Mr. Rockwood. These and other activities will be the focus of the presentation, which is supported in part by a grant from the Westport Cultural Council.

Mr. Rockwood spent his early years in Needham as a very active Cub and then Boy Scout, reaching the rank of Eagle Scout. These years nurtured his love of wildlife. He started taking photos at age five with Brownie box camera. Now, more than 55 years later, he continues to capture and share his boyhood fascination and love of wildlife through digital photos and videos.

Since November 2006, Mr. Rockwood has entertained audiences with his spectacular collections of narrated and informative shows, which include a wide array of other wildlife indigenous to the Northeast and across the United States.

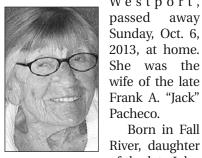

The meeting is free, open to the public, and accessible.

Summer trip in the works? Get to Westport Tire first.

here's still a lot of summer left and time to take your family on a trip to the mountains or a visit to relatives in New Jersey. But before you pile everyone and everything in the car, take a little trip to Westport Tire Center for an auto and tire checkup.

Family owned and operated, Westport Tire Center on State Road is the place to go for everything before your automobile takes a precious family on a well earned vacation or simply around the block. Mike Perry and his Dad Russell have been making sure customers are well taken care of for the past 31 years. Russell, a Westport resident since 1941 - almost a native some say began the business with his wife, Rita, and Mike in 1973. Such longevity says a lot about customer satisfaction.

While the name may say "Tire Center," Westport Tire Center and its dedicated employees go well beyond the wheels. They are experts at brakes, shocks, exhausts, four wheel alignments, oil changes and suspension work. You can be sure your car is done right. And all work is guaran-

Chouinard named interim assistant principal at middle school

The Westport Community Schools has announced the appointment of Kelly Chouinard as the interim assistant principal at the Westport Middle School, pending contract negotiations.

She said that one goal she has for this school year is to create an environment where students and teachers feel supported.

Mrs. Chouinard began her new position on October 7 after seven years at Westport High School as an English teacher. She began working at Durfee High School in 1995 as a substitute teacher, then as a long-term substitute and ultimately as an English teacher until she moved to WHS in 2007. She is certified as an English teacher on the secondary level.

Mrs. Chouinard received her bachelor of arts in English, summa cum laude, from the University of Massachusetts at Dartmouth. During her dozen years as a teacher, she has been involved in curriculum development, specifically alignment with the Common Core, development of Units of Instruction and has served on the ELA district curriculum leadership team.

She is now completing her master's degree in school administration and leadership from American International College. She completed her internship under the tutelage of Karen Antonelli, Westport High School's assistant principal. Recent professional development has been in the EDWIN Teaching & Learning system as well as the development of District Determined Measures.

Ground breaking to launch new library

BY TOM KILLIN DALGLISH tdalglish@eastbaynewspapers.comn

TIVERTON — The big moment — groundbreaking for the new $10.6 million Tiverton Library will be at 11 a.m. on Saturday, Oct. 26. The public is invited, say the Trustees of the Tiverton Library.

Right now the weed-filled library site is choked with saplings and small trees. It lies southwest of the junction of Route 81 and Highway 177 in the Bliss Four Corners area, and just east of Roosevelt Road, a recently built town road that leads south off of Bulgarmarsh Road into Sandywoods.

Library Building Committee Chairman Dr. Leon Hoyer said that even before the groundbreaking takes place, trees at the building site will be cut down, their roots removed, and the ground cleared and leveled.

Parking for the occasion, he said, will be available at the Bulgarmarsh Recreation area, at Sandywoods, and "as a last resort" along Roosevelt Road south off Bulgarmarsh Road.

Local and state officials and major donors are expected to be on hand, he said. The ceremony will last about half an hour.

Such ceremonial props as golden shovels, ribbon and big scissors will be provided by Behan Brothers, construction managers for the library project.

The final go-ahead for the project from the state has yet to be given, Dr. Hoyer said, but is expected sometime within the next 10 days. There are bids for 12 or 13 contracts and sub-contracts that must be reviewed, he said, and state authorization to proceed can only come after half a dozen state agencies have determined that their legal requirements have been met.

Dr. Hoyer declined to identify the low bidders until state approvals have been given.

After that occurs, initial site work will commence, which will include trenching for water and other utilities, capped by the laying of the foundation around December 1 or the first of the new year.

Dr. Hoyer said the completion date for the library should be near the end of 2014 or the end of the first quarter of 2015.

Funding for the project breaks down roughly as 38 percent from the state, 34 percent from grants, and the balance of about 28 percent from the town.

Learning to learn

With 50 students, 30 teachers and a unique approach to teaching, the Wolf School embraces children who don't fit other places

BY SCOTT PICKERING spickering@eastbaynewspapers.com

aula Farley stands before her class. Eight students are seated in desks, facing her. She explains their next task writing letters to peers at the Paul Cuffee School in Providence. While she's talking, many of the sixth-graders have questions. "Emily, awesome quiet hand," she says to a girl with her hand raised. A minute later, to another girl in the room, Ms. Farley says, "Ariana, nice quiet hand."

After Ariana is done talking, Ms. Farley says, "Beautifully said. I couldn't say it better myself."

Ms. Farley is not repeating herself, nor is she spreading faint praise. She's teaching inside the Wolf School, a K-to-8 school with its own language, its own culture and a totally unique approach to teaching children who were failing many other places.

With eight students, this is a large classroom for the Wolf School. Ms. Farley has a teaching assistant and a speech therapist in the room with her. She's been teaching there so long she doesn't recognize the irony when she says they will be breaking into "small groups" to work on their letters.

"Francisco and Tom will be with me at the back table" — Tom raises his hand. "Yes, Tom, nice quiet hand," she says.

"Paula," he says [students call their teachers by their first names]. "You know Tom and I have problems working together." Tom asks for a one-on-one to discuss this with his teacher. When she's done instructing and the room comes alive with students moving to their work areas, Tom moves to a far corner of the room to wait for her. Within a few minutes, she's over there, leaning in, listening to Tom.

Tall and thin, with blond hair, he tells Ms. Farley quietly about his problems working with "Fran." Francisco, meanwhile, sits at the back table with a laptop, getting started on his letter. Francisco is shorter than Tom, heavyset, with glasses. The Tom/Paula conversation is loud enough that Francisco can hear it. Without looking up, his head bent over the keyboard, Francisco says, "Tom, I know you can do it, buddy."

Two minutes later, his conversation with Ms. Farley is complete, and Tom is ready to work. He sits down near Francisco, who looks up and says, "I knew you could do it, buddy. I had faith in you."

It's a singular moment in a single classroom on an ordinary day in September. It's nothing special.

Yet it is everything special. In another school, Tom and Francisco might not be friends. In another school, Tom and Francisco might not even have friends. They would be prime targets for bullies. In this school, there are no bullies. Welcome to the Wolf School.

Their son couldn't learn

Founded in 1999 by parents who were frustrated when their son struggled in traditional educational systems, the Wolf School has always been different. The first class had three students and two teachers. It takes its name from the student who inspired it - Otto Wolf Wallerstein.

His parents, Andy and Mary Wallerstein, started the school when their son was 7 years old. They watched him and the school grow together, adding classrooms and students, buying a permanent home in the Rumford section of East Providence, and honing the philosophy that guides the school today.

Otto is now a grown man doing well in life, and the school that bears his name is doing well, too.

Wolf has 50 students spread from Kindergarten to Grade 8. They could handle a few more students, but this is close to their ideal size.

They inhabit a former East Providence elementary school that sits snugly in a residential neighborhood. A single brick building blends the old and the new, including a state-of-the-art gym and "sensory room" (more on that later), a prominent turtle tank, a gorgeous flower garden and a cute playground.

They have nearly enough desktops and laptops for every student. Staff turnover is minimal. Leadership is strong.

The most difficult task for Wolf is finding students — the right students. Wolf officially calls them "complex learners." Unofficially, these are students with an array of challenges that are magnified within traditional classrooms.

Wolf School students have difficulties in the areas of language, sensory processing and social skills. Many of them struggle socially. They don't know how to talk to their peers. They miss social cues. They don't make eye contact or understand personal space. They struggle to find friends. Navigating the complexities of a traditional school - with crowded halls, screaming cafeterias, playground bullies, frenzied gym classes and 24 to a classroom — can be a nightmare.

They struggle. They fall behind.

GUIDE TO PRIVATE SCHOOLS

The Wolf culture, built block by block

Through language and tactics, the Wolf School creates a vibe totally its own. Here's how:

LANGUAGE: The school has its own dialogue. In every classroom, in hallways, in the gym, you hear the same terms over and over and over.

■ "Quiet hand": raising your hand to speak in class

• "Whole body listening": showing that you are engaged and open to listening

■ "Strategies": each student's unique tactics to deal with their own stresses or weaknesses

■ "Expected/Unexpected": part of Michelle Garcia Winner's 'Social Thinking' curriculum that permeates the school, this describes actions that are appropriate for not appropriate for the time and place.

POSITIVE MODELING: Teachers don't spend a lot of time correcting students who show poor behavior; they endlessly praise those who are. Example: In a physical education class, teacher Mike LaRose had about 10 students seated around him on the gym floor. One was lying on his back, looking up at the ceiling. Instead of scolding the one, he said, "I see of lot of great examples of whole body listening."

RESPECT: The teachers show their students tremendous respect. Example: In a second-grade classroom, teacher Marci Haines was working on a math problem at a table with two students. As Jack was trying to process 12-6 (and getting pretty close to the answer), Mattie started talking. Ms. Haines turned to him and said, "Mattie, I'm going to ask you to freeze, because Jack W. is in the middle of thinking. Is that okay?" Without speaking, Jack gave her a thumbs up. "Thank you," she said. The respect goes further. A minute later, Mattie said to his teacher, "Jack is doing a really good job." SCHEDULES: Each classroom has its own fixed and structured schedule. Blocks of time run to the minute, and teachers use timers to let students know when they are starting and stopping each block. Many of these students need that sort of predictability and rhythm.

OPENNESS: Everyone has challenges, and no one is afraid to talk about them. All these students are here for a reason, and Wolf teaches them why. They talk openly about each student's needs and why they struggle to learn. The students learn to recognize their own challenges, and most importantly, how to self-regulate and self-correct. Ariana Hoegen learned to ask for help (instead of flipping over desks). She also learned to sing (she loves singing) when the stresses become too much TEAMWORK: Each grade has a head teacher and at least one teaching assistant for every four to eight students. In addition, speech and occupational therapists spend hours per day in every classroom. At any moment, there may be four professionals and eight students in a room, and the space moves like an orchestra. Teachers and learning specialists shift from student to student, table to desk to computer station to whiteboard, in a continuous educational dance.

TEACHER/STUDENT RATIO: It's absurdly high. This school with 50 students has 30 teachers or learning specialists. A 2:1 teacher/student ratio is common.

PLANNING: The staff plan constantly. Each team meets for at least an hour and 20 minutes each week (it's built into their schedules), and they talk and e-mail throughout the day, evenings, nights and weekends.

FUN: A week before this school year started, faculty and staff boarded a yellow school bus for a mystery field trip. Head of School Anna Johnson sent them bowling for a team-building exercise. "Piz-za Fridays" are wildly popular, when parents organize, order and distribute pizzas room to room on a rolling cart. Students take field trips regularly. They go grocery shopping together (helping develop life skills). Several classrooms go therapeutic horseback riding weekly.

What would you do if your child couldn't learn?

⁴⁴Rather than my child always struggling to fit into a school, this school strives to fit my child. ⁷⁷

They get ostracized. They go home angry and crying. Their parents can't understand them. They fail.

The Wolf School welcomes these kids, but not because they fail. They welcome students who have the potential to succeed. The most severe cases cannot attend Wolf. They would be too disruptive to the classrooms. The right student is capable of learning, with average to above average cognitive abilities, but struggling in the traditional school setting.

"These kids struggle to make friends. They don't get invited to birthday parties," said Interim Head of School Anna Johnson. "If they don't have friends, if they don't have self-esteem, if they don't have confidence, they can't learn."

Classrooms in motion

Wolf classrooms can be in constant motion, sometimes deliberately, sometimes unexpectedly. The Kindergarten and Grade 1 classrooms have six students combined this year. During a language block one morning, kindergarten head teacher Leah Valentine sat at a table with two students. Using large cards with individual letters, she placed the cards on the table to form three-letter words and challenged two boys to say the words.

A few feet away, a third boy followed a computer program that taught him letters. In the classroom next door, Grade 1 head teacher Lisa Jones worked one-onone with a boy at a white board. Nearby, behind a colorful partition, teaching assistant Maureen Quinn sat at a table with two boys. They had read the popular book "Don't Let the Pigeon Drive the Bus," and she was asking them questions.

"What's something else the pigeon cannot do?" she asked.

Owen said, "Don't let the pigeon watch TV." Chase said, "Don't let the pigeon go to the fire station" [they had just returned from a class field trip to an East Providence fire station].

"These ideas are amazing!" Ms. Quinn said.

Moments later, Ms. Jones was in the hallway with first-grader Kinan. On the floor, in the middle of the hallway, she had placed one-foot pads, each containing one of the five vowels. As she said a one-syllable word, she asked Kinan to jump to the appropriate vowel.

"Champ," she said.

Kinan looked up, gathered himself and leaped two spots to 'A.' "Shut."

He turned around and jumped to 'U.'

'Oh my goodness, you're like a cheetah, jumping so far," she said.

This exercise is not uniquely Wolf School, but the setting is. The hallways are quiet. The building is quiet. Kinan can leap through the hallway, practicing his vowels for 10 minutes, and not interrupt anyone, nor be interrupted.

It is deliberately quiet. Because their students have sensory processing issues, they like it that way.

"Some of our students can't eat lunch in a cafeteria because it's sensory overload," said the interim head of school, Ms. Johnson. "So we don't have a cafeteria. We don't have an auditorium. Our gym is specially designed for sound reduction."

The sensory room

Off the gym is Wolf's "sensory room." A casual observer might call it a playroom; it's a playroom with a purpose.

On a recent morning, four firstgrade boys were in the sensory room. Occupational therapist Andrea Horgan rotated them through four stations — a bench swing, a tire swing, a hammock and a seat swing. There's also a 10foot-high rock wall. The movements are not random.

As Ms. Horgan explained, some kids are naturally sluggish, with low motors, especially in the morning. In Wolf lingo, these kids are normally in the "yellow zone." Other kids are often overstimulated, with high motors, the types you see literally bouncing off the walls. In Wolf lingo, these kids are normally in the "red zone."

In order to learn, Wolf wants these boys in the "green zone." The sensory room helps get them there. The sensory room apparatus target the vestibular and proprioceptive senses — in common language, they help the "yellow" kids rev up to green, and the "red" kids throttle down to green. It helps them get ready to learn.

This concept permeates the school. Students who need sensory feedback may sit at a chair with "thera bands" across the legs. They're basically large rubber bands that the students can press their legs or feet against throughout the day.

Other students who have trouble sitting still may sit on an inflated rubber pad, so they shift and squirm and move without actually getting out of their seats.

Students with oral needs are allowed to chew gum or suck on candies throughout the day.

And then there are the "movement breaks." Wolf schedules them throughout the day. In the seventhgrade classroom one day, head teacher Maureen Gagne had all nine students stand up and find an open spot in the classroom. For about 10 minutes, she lead them through a series of squats, pushups, lunges and other exercis-

For students who struggle sitting for 20 minutes at a time, the exercises set the table for a new academic block. As soon as they were done, and the heavy breathing stopped, students chose a color and tried describing their feelings about that color.

Relentless planning

Administratively, nothing happens by chance at Wolf. Faculty spend a remarkable amount of time planning their days. They

They know which child mixes well, or not so well, with another child. They know which one is working above their grade level, and which one is below their level. They orchestrate all movements throughout the day and keep pace with timers and strict schedules.

"There's a lot of planning time, really for each child," said Grade 4 head teacher Amy Taft. A veteran of the Newport public schools, she came to Wolf three and a half years ago and is now an enthusiastic convert to the Wolf model.

Ariana has a "strategy binder," full of her own strategies for success. They seem to be working.

Though she entered the school struggling in many ways (she would occasionally flip over a desk or slam a classroom door), Ariana is an outspoken model student these days. She's reading at grade level and says her life is better.

"I'm doing way better," she said. "They taught me how to make friends ... It takes at least a year to learn the strategies and how to use them. It's helped me so much, but it's also helped my sisters and my parents."

Now Ariana tries helping others. At a soccer game recently, she met a girl a little younger than her who struggles with language. "I told her all about my school. I told her we can help her," Ariana said.

Students in an upper school art class work on perspective drawings in PCD's Nature Lab.

Classroom lessons linger when students get their hands dirty

BY CHRISTY NADALIN

"Experiential learning" is a new name for an old concept: providing hands-on learning opportunities that connect classroom work to outside-the-classroom activities. Experiential learning makes lessons more real and relevant; and educators know from experience, that makes information stick.

"Doing something—rather than just hearing or reading about it—makes it that much more memorable," says Nellie Walcoff, Director of Communications at the Providence Country Day School. The 10acre, forested Nature Lab at the East Providence independent school is an perfect example of the integration of experience with classroom work. "We use the Nature Lab across a range of disciplines, from science and environmental studies, to art," says Ms. Walcoff. "For example, one class is creating a bird book, documenting the species found on campus."

While many schools, both public and private, provide for some amount of experiential learning, private schools are not as locked into a rigid curriculum schedule, allowing for more room to create experiential learning opportunities.

PCD's Nature Lab is just one of many examples of experiential learning incorporated into the curriculums of local schools. Friends Academy, in Dartmouth, has a prolific garden that you can read about in this issue. The Pennfield School in Portsmouth is able to incorporate the adjacent greenways of the Aquidneck Island Land Trust into their PK-8 curriculum. St. George's School in Middletown offers an ongoing semester-at-sea program aboard their boat "Geronimo," where students undertake specific research projects while learning about life at sea—and keeping up with their regular lessons.

One characteristic that schools with well-developed experiential learning programs tend to share is smaller class sizes, which make it easier for teachers to customize and follow up on these learning opportunities, when they present themselves. An additional, less-obvious benefit is the personal growth of the student, beyond academics. According to Ms. Walcoff, you see more students stepping up into leadership roles. "A small community with experiential learning opportunities makes leadership roles available to a wider range of students," she says.

Math and science: Do single-sex classrooms support better outcomes?

There was a noted achievement gap between boys and girls in certain academic disciplines long before "Teen Talk Barbie" created an uproar for her 1992 verbal gaffe "math class is tough!" Since then, the acronym STEM has become a regular fixture of edu-speak. Standing for Science, Technology, Engineering and Math, women have shrunk the gap in these fields in recent years. Still, they represent half the workforce, yet only a quarter of the workers in these traditionally higher-paying fields.

A group of University of Pennsylvania researchers traveled to South Korea to observe the results of their single-sex and coed educational systems, publishing their results in October 2012 in the journal "Demography." For nearly 40 years, South Korean public school students have been randomly assigned to single sex or coed classrooms. There is no opt-out option for these assignments, and other variables remain equal. The findings were not surprising: both boys and girls in single-sex classrooms attended fouryear colleges at a higher rate than did their contemporaries in co-ed classrooms.

Why? Sometimes the best explanation is the simplest one: it may just be that less members of the opposite sex=less distraction=better academic outcomes.

And while single-sex classrooms did lead to better results for girls in STEM courses, what was even more surprising is that the results were even better for boys. That's right—removing the girls from the classrooms had an even more beneficial effect on the boys' scores and outcomes, a surprising result given that the STEM deferential may be one of the key reasons why all-girls schools are vanishing at a slower rate than their all-boys counterparts.

The National Association for Choice in Education does raise one concern with the article: that one classroom structure is inherently better than another. According to the NACE, "We believe that premise is fundamentally mistaken. The single-gender format is better for some students, and coed is better for others."

Ultimately each student is unique, and parents need to make the best decision for each of their children. If you want to look further into single-sex education in Rhode Island, there are three options: Bishop Hendricken (boys); or Lincoln School and St. Mary Academy Bay View (girls). Contact information for all three schools can be found on pages 8-10.

Friends Academy student Kenny Mackenzie of Westport harvests lettuce. Local food pantries receive fresh produce from the school's garden, delivered weekly throughout the summer and fall.

Service by the square foot

BY KYLE RISELEY

When Friends Academy Middle School English teacher Steve Walach talks about the work he does in the school's community garden, he spews numbers:

■ 475 pounds of tomatoes harvested this year

285-day maturity cycle for winter carrots

■ 1 square foot of garden real estate yields one pound of winter carrots and two pounds of summer carrots

■ 5,000 pounds of produce will be harvested from the garden this year (compared with 4,497 pounds in 2010, the best of years past)

More than 500 pounds of Portuguese kale have been harvested for area soup kitchens so far this year....

Clearly, to be capable of producing the kind of yield that is coaxed from 1,900 square feet of bed space each season, one needs to be mindful of the numbers. But for Mr. Walach and his band of harvesting helpers, that is only part of the story.

Current students, faculty, parents, past parents and alumni have given their time and expertise to help build a legendary garden filled with 10-foot sunflowers, and multi-varieties of cabbage, cauliflower, kale, tomatoes, squash, rutabaga, peppers, lettuce, onions, and anything else you can add to a pot of boiling water.

When all is said and done, the school's vegetable garden helps to feed its neighbors through weekly harvests of vegetables that are delivered to the Grace Church Food Pantry of New Bedford, and to soup kitchens and food pantries in Pawtucket.

Bugs, blight and bok choi

Last fall, student volunteers battled a tomato blight that arrived in mid-August, and was probably caused by the extra mild winter of 2012. "The beds really took a beating," Mr. Wallach says, "and although we harvested 475 pounds of tomatoes, we should have had 200 pounds more.'

Students pulled out the blighted plants by hand and then used broad forks to aerate the soil. The plants were not composted as usual, but instead sent off to the landfill where the offending fungus was likely to have been killed off, given the cold conditions of last winter.

Organic gardens are subject to all kinds of natural challenges, so Mr. Walach and his team learn about and practice crop rotation, and feed the soil with a careful and ever-evolving blend of organicallyapproved nutrients.

The key to increasing yield, it seems, is the continued practice of using one wheel-

If you really are serious about this stuff, you will also want to know that they have recently begun using "a slurry made from soft rock phosphate — approximately six diluted quarts per bed, per planting drenched and then sprayed with a special mix of compost tea." Perhaps this explains why the garden's yield ratios easily keep pace or exceed those of area growers.

Work in the garden happens over a tenmonth cycle, from February to mid-December. The student labor pool comes from a variety of sources. Groups of student volunteers sign up for three-month stints via the school's Service-Learning program, forming the backbone of the operation.

Mr. Walach also works with sixth-graders, as part of their health curriculum. These dedicated 10 and 11-year-olds plant, weed and harvest from September to December, sifting and loading wheelbarrows of compost and organic nutrients, and witnessing the growth cycle in reverse, beginning with the harvest in September October and November, and moving into bed preparation for the following season. In the spring, the season begins anew with the seeding of onions and lettuces as early as February.

"A sixth-grader's journey through the school year parallels the 285-day life cycle of a carrot!" says Mr. Walach.

The walls in and around Mr. Walach's classroom are papered with thank you letters from area food pantries and soup

Rutabaga kitchens. "My grandfather raised eight kids on nine dollars a week, as a laborer in a Rhode Island textile mill during the Depression. His large garden played a big role in feeding the family," Steve Walach recounts in answer to a question about the evolution of his passion for growing. He has taken the garden, begun in 2006 to educate students about the importance of locally grown food sources and the sustainability of natural resources, and has grown it into a reliable source of fresh vegetables for local food pantries. "The garden provides us with an evolving opportunity to teach and demonstrate lessons in ecology, eco-literacy, and community service to young people," he says.

New York investors buy Hunt Yachts

New York-based investment firm has purchased Portsmouthbased boat builder Hunt Yachts the company announced last week.

Scout Partners, a joint venture between David Howe and Peterson Capital LLC, bought Hunt for an undisclosed sum.

In 2010 Scout purchased The Hinckley Company, also headquartered in Portsmouth.

Now under common ownership, the two companies will main-separate but

identities work together, BURDETT according to a news

release announcing the sale. The most immediate example will be "in the Hinckley service yards which now have a direct pipeline to Hunt parts and technical advice to service Hunt products."

Hunt Yachts President Peter Van Lancker will continue to run the company, which will now be called Hunt Yachts LLC.

"I could not have designed a better stage for the future of the Hunt Yachts' brand, legacy and products than this new ownership and partnership with Scout Partners and Hinckley," Mr. Van Lancker said.. "I can tell you that David Howe and the Hinckley team share the passion and enthusiasm to ensure Hunt Yachts of even greater growth, success and innovation.'

Hunt Yachts was founded in Massachusetts in 1998 to build designs from C. Raymond Hunt Associates, which pioneered the deep-V hull shape for power boats. C. Raymond Hunt Associates will remain the exclusive designer of Hunt Yachts, which moved to Rhode Island in 2004 and now employs about 50 people.

Peterson Capital was founded by investor Peter G. Peterson, founder of the Blackstone Group and a former U.S. commerce secretary under President Richard M. Nixon, whose foundation advocates reducing the national debt.

Smith wins Bud Humphrey

Colby Smith sailed October, a Graves Constellation 30, to victory in the 35th Bud Humphrey Memorial Race on Sept. 29.

The fleet of 64 boats battled light air from the start off Ohio Ledge all the way around Prudence and only 20 boats managed to finish.

Race organizer Tom Scott said that earlier starters in the staggered-start race rode a dying and shifty breeze down the west side of the island. Those fortunate enough to make it around the south end were rewarded by a change to southerly breeze and an incoming tide.

Squaw, an S Boat sailed by Angus Davis, was actually the first boat to finish and the only boat across the line within the 4 p.m. limit with three minutes to spare (otherwise there would have been no race) but he later withdrew due to an incorrect rating.

Other top-ten finishers were: 2. Bob Catani, Bramasole 3. Bob Wart, Avalon

4. Jack Welsh/Wiley Crockett, Still Crazy

Local firm to sell Tartans

The local yacht brokerage firm of New England Yacht Partners has expanded to represent the full line of new Tartan Yachts.

New England Yacht Partners is a joint venture between Barrington residents Ham Freeman and Bill Shaw Jr.

"The core business is and will remain the brokerage of used sailing and power yachts," Mr. Shaw said, "but with the addition of Tartan, we will be able to offer a new boat line."

Tartan Yachts, based in Fairport Harbor, Ohio, started in 1940 and is comprised of nine sailboat models, from the 26 foot daysailor to their flagship 5300.

Laser wins court round

Portsmouth-based LaserPerformance has beaten back an attempt by two foreign firms to sell what it says are protected Laser class sailboats.

The company sued Optiteam and Nautisch Centerum Delfzul for infringing on Laser trademark rights by illegally importing Laser and Sunburst-branded boats and parts for sale in Europe.

On Sept. 27, a Belgium court ordered the two firms to cease such sales and levied a fine.

Nautisch is a dinghy builder that has been designated as an authorized builder of the Kirby Torch. That new name —for the boat long known as the Laser has been introduced by Laser designer Bruce Kirby who says Laser Performance is not properly

Hawks, Bears nationally ranked

Roger Williams University ranks eighth in the latest Sailing World co-ed dinghy national college coaches' poll. The Hawks are 12th in the women's poll.

Brown University stands 12th and sixth respectively in the two polls.

Warren-based USWatercraft, has introduced the True North 34 MKII twin outboard express.

The company bills the boat as "an exciting new departure from traditional Downeast propulsion systems, one whose range extends "into shallow bays and waterways." The boat is scheduled to debut next spring.

"We are extremely excited about expanding our market with the combination of the True North 34's stunning lines and new fourstroke outboard efficiencies and Weatherby, USWatercraft vice president of sales and marketing.

Boat talk in Bristol

Rhode Island Public Radio (RIPR) brings its One Square Mile Series to Bristol this Thursday, Oct. 10, from 7-8 p.m. at the Bristol Elks Lodge, 1 Constitution Street. The event is free and open to the public.

The forum will feature Bristol boat builders and industry leaders discussing how the boat building industry is recovering from the bottom dropping out in 2008.

Rays has filled the archenemy void nicely. I was at Fenway last weekend for game 2 of the ALDS against Tampa Bay and the crowd taunted the right fielder as if he were A-Rod. Whether it's Army-Navy (go Navy!) or Red Sox-Yankees, having a team that's sweet to beat is part of what makes sports compelling.

And while rivalries make games interesting, making sure that there's competition in politics is far more important. There has been so much ink given to the Rhode Island Republican gun raffle that I hesitate to wade into the critical waters (although I hear it's warm), but the truth is that this is less about the wisdom of the raffle and more about the long-term consequences it will have on our state.

Some from the RIGOP view the gun raffle as a success: they raised thousands, showed support for the 2nd amendment and got more free media than the party has in recent memory. As the moderate Republicans scrambled to distance themselves from the party, I was left wondering whether the RIGOP is more concerned about being "right" or winning races. I can think of very few RI districts where a credible candidate needs to advocate for gun rights and dozens where the majority of voters want to see guns in the hands of law enforcement only. Making 2nd amendment rights a signature issueeven for a week—has dragged the party so far off message (which should still be jobs and the lackluster economy) that attracting viable candidates will be a chore.

Some of my Democratic friends moderates of either party. would argue that the RIGOP is already irrelevant since certain members of the Democratic party are just like moderate Rhode Island Republicans anyway. While this may be true, the ranks of those centrist Democrats are thinning because they are targeted and "taken out" in low-interest, low-turnout primaries. For Rhode Island, the irrelevance of the RIGOP and the absence of moderate Democrats would mean that there's no ideological voice of dissent on issues like tolling local bridges or unionizing daycare workers. Bottom line: we need discussion and debate to ensure a healthy representative democracy and we won't have that without Republicans or

As we settle into postseason baseball, I'll be on the edge of my seat and excited to watch some great games between competitive teams. At the same time, I'm rooting for candidates of every stripe to sign up and take a turn in our General Assembly. Let's hope that every party can field a good team and create enough debate so that the whole state wins.

Weekend watch list

Whether you like to scare yourself silly or just relax and watch a little post-season baseball, there is some classic October viewing to be seen this weekend.

At press time, game 3 of the ALDS has yet to be played. But at the risk of jinxing the entire postseason, it is looking as though the Red Sox will be making an appearance at the ALCS, which will be televised beginning this Saturday, Oct. 12, with the hour to be determined. Games 1-4 are a certainty, with game 2 on Sunday, Oct 13, and games 3 and 4 on Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 15 and 16. Fox.

(Yankees fans who don't want to watch the Red Sox laser show can imagine what A-Rod will do when he wins his suit against MLB and his former team, tuning into Lifetime's latest offering "Million Dollar Shoppers." It's about the wild life of personal shoppers, catering to their highly-compensated and higher-maintenance clientele; 10 p.m., Tuesday, Oct. 15. Lifetime.)

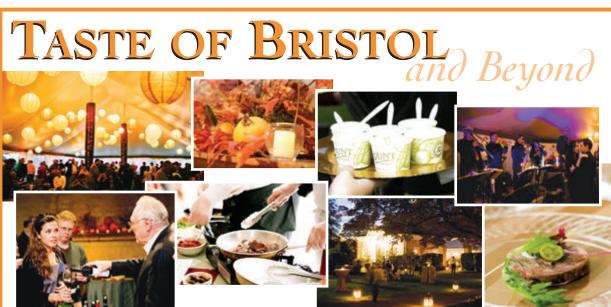

The highly-anticipated premiere of season 4 of The Walking Dead, "30 Days Without an Accident," will air this Sunday. Yes, this show is pretty graphic, and zombies are pretty revolting to behold, especially when they are being

TRASH OR TREASURE?

Chemically unstable framing materials damage paper

Q. I have a print which I found stored in the attic of my parents' house. It has a lot of browning on the edges and brown spots throughout. What is happening, and can it be removed?

A. The greatest damage to works of art on paper occurs in mounting, mat-

mat board, corrugated cardboard, rubber cement, glues, ting and framing. Common materials such as inexpensive masking or transparent tape, etc. contain ingredients which are chemically unstable. These materials deteriorate over time and damage the artwork they are in contact with.

The brown spots you are seeing are called "foxing". Foxing results from humidity, leading to mold spores. The damage on the edges is from the cardboard it was stored in. The acid from the cardboard has bled onto the artwork. Paper is naturally absorbent and will take in any gas or liquid that surrounds it.

Avoid storing artwork in a damp basement or attics with inconsistent temperatures. Do not hang artwork on an uninsulated outside wall, store near plumbing or near a heat source.

What to do? Take it to a good framer and if necessary, they will recommend a conservator. Unfortunately, if not caught early, the damage could be irreversible.

Q. I inherited this 7" teapot. It has a stamp on the bottom but I cannot make out what it says. Can you identify it and tell me what it could be worth?

A. Your teapot was made by the Porcelier Manufacturing Company from Pennsylvania. The stamp is from 1927-1949 and was one of the earlier stamps they used. Porcelier made a wide variety of porcelain household goods including electrical fixtures, waffle irons and teapots. Common decorations are spring time flowers and woven baskets similar to the body of your teapot. Others found were selling between $25 and $40. GOP shoots itself in the foot

Game of Chance: A game of chance is any game in which the element of chance predominates over the element of skill in the possibility of winning a prize with pecuniary consideration being involved to participate.

S o speaketh the "Rules and Regulations Governing the RI Games of Chance" which is overseen by the Rhode Island state police. How happy law enforcement must be monitoring the R.I. GOP raffle where the top prize is an AR-15 semiautomatic assault-

style rifle. There will be 4 shooting stations for this "Family Fun" day where

Arlene VIOLET including a Smith and Wesson M&P 15, which is described as a "civilian version" of the M16 semi-automatic military rifle semi-automatic military rifle. Additional prizes include various ammo rounds and gift certificates for shooting supplies. In defending the "fundraiser," GOP head Mark Smiley noted

GOP head Mark Smiley noted that there needs to be some addressing of mental health problems so those not capable of being in society can get some help—yet the very nature of a raffle is it is win through pure chance. Smiley's actions speak louder than words, as in this case, no screening process is in place for the winner(s). Perhaps there should be some mental health screening for the Republicans who thought this was a good idea.

There are some problems, for sure, with the fundraiser. For starters, the service of outside promoters who are not permanent members of the applying organization can't be employed in any way with the managing, operating, or supervising or controlling the games of chance. Yet, Mr. Smiley acknowledges that NRA instructors will man the shooting stations where a patron "buys" the chance to shoot a weapon. Query whether they have been GOP members for at least one full year under the regulation requirements of Reg. 1.5. Games allowed under the regulations do not contemplate weapons or ammo as the prizes.

This is not your father's Bingo! Most egregiously, however, is the announcement of the fundraiser around the same time that a task force is convening to examine how to keep guns out of the hands of those with mental illnesses which precipitate a propensity to violence (not all mental illnesses do). The GOP has shown a way to avoid any background check for felons or for mental health problems by holding a raffle. All the Aaron Alexises of the world have to do is buy a ticket to this "family fundraiser." Even promoting such a day as a family event is a slap in the face to the Newtown parents who don't think such easy access to guns is something to celebrate.

There was a time when the state Republicans use to have some sense. It was moderate, attuned to social justice and the promotion of women, myself included, for higher office. Now it has become a reactionary group that shows signs of melding with the national Greatly Ossified Party. Both local and national Republican leaders are clueless. A wet kiss to the NRA isn't the way to elect officials.

There are nuances for every issue that must be respected and should be implemented in law to protect the public. The GOP seems incapable of such nuanced analysis. Far too many of their members come across as yahoos, incapable of wielding a scalpel instead of a hacksaw.

This latest caper by the state GOP is an embarrassment.

DINING REVIEW

It's very continental at Le Moulin Rouge

e Moulin Rouge is an East Bay treasure that spent years hidden in plain sight in a triangle on Main Road between the south and north exits of Route 24. With the new bridge in place, Main Road carries drivers past as they exit Route 24 heading south.

That's a good thing, because this is a restaurant you want to know about. It offers an oldfashioned dining experience with classical French and continental cuisine and lots of seafood favorites, too. The large barn red house with black trim was a private residence built in the 1920s, became a restaurant in the 1950s and has been home to Le Moulin Rouge since 1976.

The dining rooms are comfortable with wainscoted knotty pine walls, hardwood floors, white linens, candles and soft music. The one to the right as you enter must have been a porch and has large glass windows decorated with floral balloon curtains overlooking the miniature lighthouse in front.

We started with a glass of wine from a large international list, that includes half bottles, and there are beers from France, Holland and the United States, along with a variety of martinis and Le Moulin Bloom, a tasty mix of vodka, St. Elder Liqueur and cranberry juice with a twist of lemon.

We started with a Nicolas Chardonnay and a Folonari Pinot Noir.

A savory cheese spread and crackers were delivered to the table by our waitress, Crissy, along with a description of the evening's specials — cream of tomato and basil soup, swordfish Française, Beef Wellington and chicken Marsala.

The regular menu offers lots of seafood choices, including swordfish, sole Nantua, lobster sauté, lobster Newburg, Shrimp Festival (stuffed, Rockefeller, Newburg, scampi and fried), baked stuffed shrimp, baked scrod, snow crab with seafood

Other entrées and specialties are the frog legs Provençale, veal or chicken Française, roast duckling, veal Oscar, chicken Cordon Bleu, chicken Florentine, filet mignon, sirloin steak, Chateaubriand Béarnaise, sirloin or filet mignon flambé au poivre, and grilled rack of lamb. And, there's prime rib on Fridays and Saturdays.

We started with the escargot maison and an appetizer-sized serving of the frog legs. The escargot are earthy and meaty and served in garlic butter on a bed of spinach.

Crissy flamed the sauce for the roast duckling flambé Bigarade at the table and spooned it over the large half duckling until the flames subsided. The duck is roasted with a classic orange sauce until the skin is crispy, but the meat tender and succulent. A fabulous dish.

The beef Wellington was gorgeous on the plate and in the mouth — a beautiful mediumrare filet mignon, pink and juicy, topped with a layer of creamy duck liver paté and wrapped in puff pastry. The crisp, golden mound was drizzled with a velvety Béarnaise sauce and surrounded by a puddle of rich, mushroom sauce.

The swordfish Française was equally impressive — a thick steak sautéed and topped with crossed asparagus spears, capers and a garnish of lobster claws, all drizzled with a lemon-butter sauce.

Sides were green beans almondine and carrot rounds. The house potatoes boulangere are red potatoes, sliced and baked with chicken broth, onions and herbs — a lovely preparation. Or, you can opt for a baked potato. The sides were served family style, another nice touch.

The dessert menu boasts chocolate mousse, crepes Suzette, cherries jubilee, warm rice pudding, cheesecake, peach Melba, sundaes, French parfaits or ice cream. Dessert specials were a blueberry/strawberry cobbler, chocolate cake and pecan pie.

We've had the superb crepes Suzette flambé and wanted to try the cherries jubilee. Crissy flamed them at the table and then the fat, purple cherries bathed in the warm brandy were spooned over ice cold French vanilla ice cream. It all melted slightly for a creamy and sweetly tangy dessert.

We enjoyed coffee with them, but there are international coffees, espresso, ports, liqueurs and Cognacs, too.

The restaurant also has banquet facilities for up to 50. The weekly Dining Review is rotated among restaurants that advertise in the Food & Dining section.

receiving at The Gamm Theatre in Pawtucket. It's a wild ride and you may get a little lost along the way and perhaps that's part of the point. On this theatrical journey your subconscious stirs from its slumber and that demonstrates, vividly, what great theatre, that most ephemeral of art forms, is capable of. These plays have the power to simply show us our dreams, even if those dreams should prove to be nightmares.

A director friend of mine once told me as we rehearsed a play that "our job begins after the audience leaves the theater." That is certainly the case here as I have been unable to not think about the characters, ideas, issues and images raised up here. The Gamm's delicately engaging production of these two plays serve as a subtext of the actual events presented here and manages to illuminate your consciousness even as it tickles and sometimes befuddles you.

This is the sort of theatre I love, it asks the audience to become a part of the cast and experience, requires a little heavy mental lifting from you to help create it's meaning and by doing so creates an evening of communal engagement. This is theatre, not just as story or live spectacle but a sort of modern holy mystery play.

So what's it all about? To reveal too much is to give it all away and spoil the experience. And this is a trip you must take yourselves to fully appreciate. Each of the concise one-act plays are placed in the not too distant future and examine the lives of wholly identifiable people in situations where the events that govern their lives are, often to absurd lengths, wholly out of their control.

Rather like the characters we meet, we in the audience are, from the outset, kept a little off balance and on the edge too. As we enter the theater we hear all around us the sing-song sounds of children singing nursery rhymes intermingled with the tinkle of tiny laughter. The effect is unnerving and mildly disturbing. Before us is a white partition upon which black and white photographs of children have been placed, behind that a wall of glass windows. These will be used later, at the moment they serve to offer distorted fun-house reflections of the action and the audience. This is very much of a piece with the worlds that Playwright Churchill presents here where there seems always to be a sense of the sinister lurking right under the surface of things.

And it is what lies under the surface of events that matter here. In "A Number", to judge from mere appearances, we are in a sort of Sci-Fi story, a future involving mad scientists and cloning. But underlying this scenario is an existential crisis worthy of Samuel Beckett coupled with the twisted familial relationships found in the works of Harold Pinter. Bernard, played by Tony Estrella, is a young man aghast to discover that he has been cloned as a child and that there are "a number" of his selves out there in the world. But from this futuristic starting point we venture forth into the realm of philosophical inquiry and the question of what, if anything, it means to be human. Are we merely a sum of a combination of the bits and specks that make up our essential components? What makes us special?

These are questions that confound even the non-cloned and extend to the actions, inactions and behavior patterns of Bernard's father Salter. Would he, given a choice, do what he did all over again? Indeed, does 'choice', given each human individual's unique and almost programmed nature, even exist? Are the concepts of consciousness and free will merely illusory?

These are heady questions with no easy answers that the playwright thankfully does not attempt to answer for you.

Instead, Churchill sharply and slyly frames the crisis in such a way that requires you to search for answers and to question the very idea of yourselves.

In the second play "Far Away" we witness an entire world at war and the three seeming disconnected vignettes that make up this piece illustrate how acquiescence to the cruelty inherent in a totalitarian state, or perhaps in the world at large, will ultimately crush your spirit. Whether this is a cautionary tale or the author's observation of empathetic entropy all around us is, again, up to you to decide.

"Far Away" presents three scenes that take place over the course of the life of Joan and we slowly realize that what she has witnessed all her life is so much sheer brutality that she has simply become accustomed to it; the evil around her has become to seem casual, even a bit banal. Up to a point.

Churchill takes a certain delight here in pushing the extremes of her circumstances to absurdist lengths; eventually humanity's constant state of strife with the world at large escalates to a conflagration in which man, animals and the forces of nature are locked in a ceaseless struggle. The Canadians, the Venezuelans and the mosquitoes make up one coalition. The engineers, the chefs, the children under five and the musicians make up another. The Bolivians have been working with gravity. The juxtapositions employed here are hilarious and horrific all at once.

I very much like how playwright Churchill manages to combine the non-linear and the quotidian in "Far Away", but the tenuous connections between the three scenes can seem jarring. Especially as "Far Away" is coupled here with "A Number", a play so concerned with the ideas of nature versus nurture I fear that we do not always see clearly enough how the events Joan witnesses in one scene influences and shapes her actions in the next. We surmise that she accepts the evil around her; we don't always see clearly how or why. But we do understand, with a sense of encroaching foreboding, "Far Away", for all its absurdity, really isn't at all that far from us.

Madness is always on the margins of these plays and the points that Caryl Churchill makes are like the tips of ice bergs floating in a sea of dreams; the bulk of meaning lies under the surface. "Far Away" implores us to explore our conscience while "A Number" examines both our humanity and the implications of our scientific achievements and suggests, among many other things, that the unexamined life is perhaps worth living. Both plays ask you to free your mind from the fetters of literalism and engage in a dream-state that is perhaps not quite as unworldly as we would like to think.

Martin's Garden Notes Prepare your garden for Winter

Give your lawn a great boost for the winter and a head start for the spring by fertilizing with a fall fertilizer. These fertilizers are especially formulated to encouraging a strong root system. They also have a timed release component so the fertilizer is still feeding into next spring.

If you have applied lime in some time it may be wise to test your soil to see how much you need to apply. You can stop by the store to pick up an order form to send off with your soil samples.

Spring flowering bulbs are always a great addition to the garden. Apply bulb food with them to help them come back stronger every year. Avoid using bone meal as it may attract animals, especially skunks. One interesting fact our Dutch Bulb salesman mentioned is that tulips like a high pH so a little dusting of lime when you plant them will help a lot. Roses can be allowed to bloom into early winter and then only cut back a little. Climbers should be just tied back to their supports. Further pruning can be done in early April. I have had good sucess protecting roses with a cylinder of tar paper tied arround the plants with a couple of shovel fulls of compost piled around the crown. Do this after we have had a good frost and the plants have lost their leaves.

MEET Michelle and Kathy: REALTORS AND FRIENDS

Michelle Rockwell and Kathy Pierard of RE/MAX River's Edge not only work together as a team, they're also the best of friends. BY JOAN D. WARREN

Michelle Rockwell started her career working in a large family business that designed and manufactured custom store fixtures. With a background in sales and design. as well as an MBA, she decided to extend into real estate, in 2005. Her first year as a realtor, she was recognized as "Rookie of the Year." Since then, she has increased my business every year. She lives in Rumford with her husband and two children.

Kathy Pierard is a Providence College craduate with a degree in Sociology. She has a marketing background, and is a lifelong resident of Rhode Island --- a lifelong resident of Rumford in particular. Prior to working for RE/MAX, she was an insurance broker with RISCO, part of Starkweather and Shepley in East Providence, and a professional liability specialist working with errors and omissions, D&O and EPL coverages.

WHY REAL ESTATE AS A CAREER?

Michelle: "Real estate is my second career. Prior to real estate, I owned and operated a large manufacturing facility. As a result of imports, we closed the facility. I was tired of that industry and wanted a change. I looked into real estate, and the rest is history."

Kathy: "It is a rewarding field to work in, as you help people with one of the biggest decisions in their life. I enjoy working with people, and every day is an adventure.

There is never a dull moment." WHAT DO YOU LIKE MOST ABOUT IT?

Michelle: "Real estate allows me to set my own schedule while utilizing my marketing and business background. I also enjoy working with customers in their home search or in the listing of their home."

Kathy: "The satisfaction that you get from knowing you've helped a buyer or seller accomplish their goal and that they are happy. It really is rewarding to know you've helped someone find their new home. That, plus the opportunity to work closely with people and develop great relationships with buyers, sellers and colleagues." ANY DISLIKES?

Michelle: "After working in manufacturing, I really don't have any dislikes."

Kathy: "The hours can be demanding at times. But if you are organized and a planner (as I am), you can make it work."

WHAT ARE SOME OF YOUR HOBBIES?

Michelle: "Gardening, golf, working out, shopping (is that a hobby or an obsession?)"

Kathy: "When I'm not working I like to spend time with my family and friends, do a little shopping, try new restaurants and squeezing in a round of golf when I can.' BEST VACATION EVER?

Michelle: "My husband and I took this fabulous vacation to wine country in California - golf in the morning and then visiting a different winerv every afternoon. We then drove down to Big Sur - fabulous!"

Kathy: "I would have to say the best vacation I've ever taken was my honeymoon in London. I have always been fascinated with Great Britain and the Royals. There is just so much to see and do there that it was a whirlwind trip." BUCKET LIST ITEMS?

> For Sale RE/MAX

RIVER'S EDGE

Michelle: "Golf with my husband on all the great golf courses in Europe, see the Queen's jewels, golf in Hawaii."

Kathy: "Definitely more traveling both in this country and abroad."

WHAT'S YOUR BEST CULINARY CREATION?

Michelle: "Herb crusted beef tenderloin with a horseradish mustard sauce."

Kathy: "I have the biggest sweet tooth so I love to make candy. My double chocolate walnut fudge is my favorite."

FAVORITE MOVIE OR TELEVI-SION SHOW?

Michelle: " 'Cold Case' and HBO's 'Game of Thrones.' ' Kathy: " 'It's a Wonderful Life.'

This movie always lifts my spirits." SUMMER, WINTER, SPRING

OR FALL?

Michelle: "Fall. Love the weather and fashions!"

Kathy: "No question, I absolutely love the summer. It is my favorite time of year. I love the weather, going to the beach, dining outside and everything that goes with it. I am very disappointed when it's over."

House of the Week Portsmouth Victorian has proud history, needs love he Victorian home located at 567 Bristol Ferry Road was built in 1910 as the home for Sarah J. Eddy, a pioneer in early photography, a philanthropist, feminist and founder of the Rhode Island Humane Society. Ms. Eddy was also a sculptor and painter with a passion to help others. She often held picnics on her property for the old and the poor.

It has been said that the home was the cultural center of town. Ms. Eddy donated the funds for the building of the children's reading room at Portsmouth Free Library. She left her estate to the Boston Humane Society and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

The house has 4,233 square feet of living space and sits on 2.5 acres with a water view of Narragansett Bay. The three-story home has period details, seven fireplaces, stained glass and 14 rooms. It was converted into 4 apartments by the current owners, who bought the property in 1945.

The home is in need of extensive renovations and could be reverted to its original glory as a single-family home.

Loan rates based on $100,000 with 20% down payment & no PMI. Variable mortgages listed are for 30 years, adjusted annually. Points are a one-time charge equal to one percent of the mortgage. APR stands for annual percentage rate and reflects closing costs spread over the life of the loan. CAP is the most a variable mortgage can increase in one year. Savings and loans and Rhode Island loan and investment banks are included in the bank section of this chart. These rates, provided by the institutions on Monday of this week, are subject to change or special conditions. For more information, consumers are advised to call the institution. First-time homebuyers may qualify for lower-rate mortgages from the Rhode Island Housing and Mortgage Finance Corporation. Many credit unions only grant loans to members and limit membership to a defined group. When shopping for mortgage rates ask for explanation of closing costs. Financial institutions that write residential mortgages that wish to be included on this list can get in touch with Classified Real Estate Advertising Specialist at 401-253-1000
